Pursuit Ends As Zioncheck Boards Train On Way Home

Expects to Catch Plane at Chicago

Representative Marion A. Zioncheck was aboard a Baltimore & Ohio express train last night, en route to his home in Seattle, Wash.

Zioncheck reached the Union Station with Kenneth Romney, Sergeant of Arms of the House Lamar Saxon, of the Capitol Police and his traveling companion, Capitol Policeman George Bishop, who was to go all the way to Seattle with him.

He wore a straw hat, a white suit, a blue shirt and a polka-dot four-in-hand tie. He was smoking a cigar, which he seldom took from his mouth.

As he boarded his train he posed for newsreel men and newspaper photographers.

"I'll be back," was the only statement he made.

Zioncheck went to the depot in Romney's tan automobile. Just before he left he expressed a wish for a new straw hat, and Romney gave him his own. At the station he was flanked by Romney and Frank Mahoney, one of Romney's assistants. On the drive to the station six Capitol policemen rode as his escort.

Through Romney, who yesterday protected him from District authorities and the Maryland police, Zioncheck stated he would leave the train at Chicago, and make the rest of the 3,000-mile journey to the Northwest by plane. Bishop, too, will go all the way.

While he was a virtual prisoner in his quarters on the sixth floor of the New House Office Building, under the protection of Romney and a detachment of Capitol police, last night Zioncheck issued a brief statement to the press.

Given Out by Romney.

Romney handed the typewritten statement to newspapermen, who had waited many hours in the corridor after they learned Zioncheck was in his office. It read:

"In the absence of my wife and secretary, I will not make any statement other than that I was 'shanghaied' to Gallinger Hospital as well as to the so-called Sheppard and Pratt Hospital, which is little more than a medieval cell house.

"Had I not escaped from the last-named place, I am certain that I would have qualified for an insane asylum in the very near future. I hate to infer that I have been persecuted; nevertheless, I have been unable even to have a suspicion of fair play."

At the same time, Zioncheck revealed through Romney how he reached the House Office Building after his escape Sunday.

When he cleared the wall, Zioncheck said, he fled through the underbrush. By darkness he had reached the Montgomery-Ward plant, on the outskirts of Baltimore.

Hailed Produce Farmer.

Here he espied a farmer driving a truck of produce. He hailed him and, without revealing his identity, got a ride to Washington.

He found himself, he said, in front of the building about 1:30 a. m. yesterday. Entering, he went to the sixth floor, where his door was ajar. Once inside, he sank, exhausted, on a table. The next thing he knew a charwoman entered, mop and bucket in hand.

"Get out," cried Zioncheck.

Zioncheck last night did not know the whereabouts of his 20-year-old bride, the former Rubye Nix, of Texarkana, Tex., to whom he was married more than a month ago. She was believed to be in hiding, because an assault warrant has been obtained for her, at the request of Mrs. Benjamin Scott Young, from whom Zioncheck sub-leased an apartment.

The aid of Romney led to his freedom last night. Earlier in the day Romney went to police headquarters, where he posted $25 collateral in connection with an assault charge against the legislator. This charge, like that against Mrs. Zioncheck, grew out of a squabble at the apart-

French Reds Ask Rout of Rightists

Paris, June 29 (AP).—Communists called today for speedy dissolution of Col. Francois de la Rocque's new Rightist party, formed for "conquest and power" in uneasy France.

Police dispersed another Nationalist demonstration at the rekindling of the flame at the tomb of the unknown soldier, beneath the Arc de Triomphe.

Members of De la Rocque's Croix de Feu, ordered dissolved by the government, fought with members of the reigning People's Front in the streets in Toulouse. Several were hurt and a number arrested.

Verbal hostilities between Rightists and Leftists were due for a Chamber of Deputies airing tomorrow in debate on the Government decree dissolving the Croix de Feu and other so-called Fascist leagues.

Andrews Sets Flight Record Of 11 Hours From Puerto Rico

Army Number One Flier Lands With Crew of 6 at Langley Field.

Maj. Gen. Frank M. Andrews, commanding general of the GHQ air force and the Army's number one flier, hung up a new world's non-stop distance record for amphibian airplanes yesterday with a 1,410 mile flight from Puerto Rico to Langley Field, Va.

Originally Gen. Andrews had planned to wing the Douglas Amphibian OA-5, which he was flying, direct to Newark Airport, but strong head winds encountered between Bermuda and the mainland cut the ship's flying speed from 129 knots to 95 knots and forced him to land at Langley Field.

With him was Maj. Gen. Frank R. McCoy, on an inspection trip to Puerto Rico, and a crew of six. The loaded ship took off at San Juan at 5:20 in the morning and was brought to land at Langley Field, at 4:29 in the afternoon, 11 hours and nine minutes later.

Set Previous Record.

The previous distance record for amphibians of the Douglas type was 1,033 miles set last December by Gen. Andrews on a flight from Puerto Rico to Miami, Fla.

From early dawn until noon Andrews, who was in touch with the War Department throughout his flight, reported the plane was doing about 129 knots. At noon, however, at a point due east of Savannah and not far for Bermuda, the plane ran into strong head winds and the speed of the ship was cut. With insufficient gas to carry him through to Newark, Gen. Andrews put in for Langley Field.

MAJ. GEN. FRANK M. ANDREWS, U. S. A.

Setting flying records is nothing new for the 52-year-old general who continues to burn up the air at an age when most flyers have retired. Last August Gen. Andrews, racing

Suspect Shaky Under Lie Test In Girl Killing

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, June 29.—A night club master of ceremonies, who police said gave "shaky" answers to questions under the "lie detector," was held for investigation tonight in connection with the slaying of comely Mrs. Florence Thompson Castle, 24, night club hostess.

The young woman was beaten to death in bed early today by what the police called a "blackface" assailant, who talked in dialect to the 7-year-old son who lay beside her and unwittingly watched the tragedy before going back to sleep.

The master of ceremonies, a friend and one-time fellow employe of Mrs. Castle's, was Sid Schaps, father of two children.

He was submitted to a "lie detector" test in Northwestern University's scientific crime detection laboratory after the police said he changed his story of his movements at the time of the crime.

Reaction Unfavorable.

Police Capt. William O'Brien reported after the test that Dr. Leonarde Keeler, of the laboratory, "reported Schaps reactions * * * were very unfavorable. He reported that the subject was shaky on all his answers about his activities and about the story he had told, causing the needle on the lie detector to fluctuate considerably."

Capt. O'Brien said none of the employes of the night club where Schaps works had seen Schaps at the club continually last night or early today.

The dead woman's mother, Mrs. Frances Polfus, told police Schaps was "jealous" of her daughter and "threatened" her.

Detectives had said they were seeking a "jealous suitor" as the killer as the result of the account of the crime as related by the son, James.

Revenge Theory.

A suitor of the woman, jealous because she took the boy for a Sunday boat ride on Lake Michigan with another man, decided on revenge.

He blacked his face and hands like a colored minstrel in preparation for the crime. When he gained entrance into the woman's room on the fourth floor of a near North Side hotel, he found her and the son sleeping side by side.

He hit her on the head with a brick he carried, fracturing her skull. Not knowing whether the blow had killed her, he knelt on the bed and choked her. The son awoke—and protested the hands on his mother's throat.

Assuming dialect, the assailant said he was a doctor and was merely "treating" her.

"It was her boy friend who hurt her," he said. "Not me."

Still talking in the dialect, he de-

U. S. Educator Leads in Attack On 'Red Rider'

Studebaker 'Resents' D. C. Situation in Address Before Teachers.

By the Associated Press.

Portland, Ore., June 29.—Resentment at the Congressional "red rider" limiting teachers of Governmental science in the District of Columbia was expressed tonight at the seventy-fourth annual convention of the National Education Association.

John W. Studebaker, United States Commissioner of Education, and Thomas W. Gosling, national director of the American Junior Red Cross, in addresses, assailed "dictatorship" in teaching.

"I am certainly not contending for the establishment of or advocacy of communism," Studebaker said. "But I do wish to point out that the implications of the situation in the District of Columbia are of great significance to all citizens who conscientiously try to bring a definition of education into harmony with our traditional concept of American democracy.

Dictatorial Censorship.

"If democracy means freedom to inquire, to learn, to express oneself * * * then we can tolerate no dictatorial censorship of thinking and learning."

Gosling, who said teachers of the District are required each month to state under oath they have not taught Communism to their pupils, declared:

"Until we remove dictatorships from the schools, we cannot with good grace attack it elsewhere. Compulsory oaths of allegiance and compulsory salutes to the flag are flagrant examples of dictatorship. * * *"

The legislative committee of the Association voted to ask repeal of the "red rider" after members of the committee had declared the ruling an "insult" to teachers.

The clause, written into a national appropriation bill, requires Washington teachers to take an oath before receiving paychecks that they have neither taught nor advocated Communism.

The association was told by its keynoter that educating America's children is a task set in a scene "both terrifying and inspiring."

Assails Timidity.

The association's committee on academic freedom meanwhile released a report declaring "teachers must feel free in their teaching" and declaring "it is futile to expect independent, judicious and courageous minds to be developed in students * * * by timid and submissive teachers."

The report, issued by Dr. Henry L. Smith, education school dean at Indiana University, will be presented to the association.

The keynote address was delivered by Dr. Frederick M. Hunter, chancellor of Oregon's higher education system.

Girl, 6, Dies Under Car Wheels; 44th Traffic Casualty in City

Eva Mae Combs, 6, of 425 Second street northwest, was instantly killed yesterday when she ran into the street and was struck by an automobile in front of her home. Her death raised the traffic total to 44 for this year.

Detective Sergt. William J. Liverman, who investigated the case, said the car was driven by Jones Abney, 48, colored, of 206 D street northwest. Abney was held at the First Precinct pending an inquest.

Abney told police that he noticed Eva Mae on the curb with another small girl, Georgia Spiridopoules, 5, of 423 Second street northwest. He said that both ran into the street, and that Georgia pulled back and screamed a warning, but it was too late. Abney said he did not have time to stop his car.

Eva Mae was pronounced dead at Emergency Hospital as a result of a crushed chest and internal injuries.

Meanwhile, police were searching for a hit-and-run driver who struck and seriously injured Guy Conley, 55, of 720 Fourth street southeast, while standing in a loading zone at Fourteenth and C streets southwest.

Conley was taken to Emergency Hospital and treated for a broken arm, collarbone and internal injuries.

Charges Fly At Hearing on Trolley Rates

Clayton Urges Transit Company Give Trial to 5-Cent Fare.

Third of 300 Present Are Firm's Officials or Sympathizers.

By James D. Secrest.

Street car riders and stockholders met in an acrimonious open forum last night at a meeting called by People's Counsel William A. Roberts to obtain advice of civic organizations on what course to pursue in approaching public utility issues, particularly the proposed increase in bus and street car fares.

Some 50 civic organizations, chiefly citizens associations, had been invited to send spokesmen to the meeting in the board room of the District Building. Before the evening was far along, however, it was apparent that at least a third of the 300 present were either stockholders or officers of the Capital Transit Co., or admittedly sympathetic with the company's purpose.

Even Edward D. Merrill, vice president and general manager of the company, was present and sought to defend the plea of the carrier for increased revenue.

"Uninvited Guest."

William McK. Clayton, chairman of the meeting, was forced to intercede when Roberts made references to Merrill's presence as an uninvited guest.

Scattered and general charges made against street car and bus operations were centered on the proposed fare boost, the plan to broaden the one-man car service, and the purchase of 50 ten-year-old street cars from Providence, R. I.

Clayton, in an opening speech, launched a counter move to the higher fare petition by urging adoption of a straight 5-cent fare for at least a six-months trial period. He predicted that the Capital Transit Co. would make greater profits than with the weekly pass and cited the record of the carriers over 30 years.

Uniform Pass Charge.

Most of the civic spokesmen were willing to continue the weekly pass system, but with a uniform charge of $1 for all classes of service. They were practically unanimous in denouncing the one-man street car, which the street car company plans to extend.

Although the meeting was called to discuss all local public utility problems, only a scattering of remarks were made as to electric, telephone and gas rates or services.

Opening the session, Roberts, Clayton and Harry S. Wender, of the Southwest Citizens Association, made brief talks, which were broadcast over Station WOL. Roberts called attention to the approaching hearings before the Public Utilities Commission and asked for instruction. Wender assailed the Capital Transit Co. for its lack of consideration of public comfort, safety and facility of transportation.

Clayton attacked the foreign control of the company, pointing out that more than 50 per cent of the stock is owned by the North American Co., through the Washington Railway & Electric Co. and directly.

Action by Congress.

Declaring that the Federal Government owes a duty to its employes to furnish them with adequate mass transportation facilities, he predicted that Congress will be asked to place the street car and bus system under Government control or ownership if the company proves unable to provide adequate service.

Merrill, in his defense of the company, cited the drop in the average fare from 7.88 cents to 5.1 cents since the merger and institution of the weekly pass. He also called attention to the $734,000 increase in wages and the expenditure of $5,000,000 for track and equipment improvements.

The Providence cars which are being bought for Washington, he said, are from 10 to 12 years old and will, upon being reconditioned, replace vehicles 25 to 30 years old now in operation here. All are one-man cars.

He insisted that his observation, together with studies of experts, show that accidents decrease as much as 25 per cent with the adoption of one-man cars.

Mrs. Margaret Hopkins Worrall, of Columbia Heights Citizens Association, cited an instance of a woman being injured by being thrown from a car when the treadle door slammed shut before she had let go, and other spokesmen described

Woman's Odd Plea For Life Sentence Refused by Court

The odd plea of a woman convicted of second degree murder who petitioned that she be allowed to serve a life sentence rather than a 20-year term was turned down yesterday by the United States Court of Appeals for the District.

James J. Laughlin, counsel for Irene M. Anderson, argued for the life sentence, which would make the woman eligible for parole after 15 years. Under her present status, she must stay in prison for 20 years minus time off for good behavior.

According to Laughlin's contention, she should have received an indeterminate sentence. Under this law, a minimum and a maximum term are set, the former being one-fifth of the later. It was the ruling of the appellate court that it would be impossible to determine one-fifth of the woman's life span.

Confers With President

GOV. HENRY HORNER.

Both Michigan, Illinois Claimed For Roosevelt

Chiefs Optimistic on Visit Despite Recent Intra-Party Discord.

By the Associated Press.

Hyde Park, N. Y., June 29.—President Roosevelt left for Washington late tonight after canvassing the political situation in the battleground States of Illinois and Michigan and was informed his chances for carrying both were good despite recent intra-party discord.

Frank Murphy, former Detroit mayor and present high commissioner to the Philippines, and Gov. Henry Horner, of Illinois, came here at the invitation of the President and talked politics with him at a lengthy luncheon conference.

Both said they had informed the chief executive the Democrats in their States would be "united" for him in November.

Murphy May Run.

Murphy indicated strongly he would be a candidate for Governor of Michigan against the incumbent Republican, Frank Fitzgerald, who is expected to be renominated, but said he would not make a definite decision for four or five days.

He said he was going to Washington tomorrow for conferences with War and Navy Department officials about urgent Philippine matters, and then would spend the week-end in Michigan.

He added that he talked about Far Eastern affairs with the President in addition to politics.

One of Four Indorsed.

Murphy was one of four indorsed for the nomination at a recent preprimary convention. The others were George Welsh, former lieutenant governor; George Schraeder, speaker of the house, and Theodore Fry, State treasurer.

"I think the Democratic chances are good in Michigan," he said. "I think a Democratic Governor will be elected and Roosevelt will carry the State. It will be a close contest, but there are better chances for Roosevelt winning than losing. All groups in the party will be supporting the President."

Asked about former Gov. William Comstock's statement several weeks ago that the latter would not support the New Deal ticket, Murphy said:

"I doubt if he will be opposing Roosevelt."

Unanimity in Illinois.

Horner said he discussed national economics and relief in the State as well as national and State politics.

"There will be perfect unanimity for Roosevelt in Illinois," he said. "There has never been anything controversial in the attitude of the State toward the President. I expect him to carry Illinois."

Horner recently was renominated to oppose C. Wayland Brooks, Republican. The Illinois Governor won over Herman N. Bundesen, who had the support of the Chicago Democratic organization of Mayor Edward J. Kelly and National Committeeman Patrick A. Nash, in the primary.

The conference at the Roosevelt ancestral home lasted more than two hours. Political observers saw in it an effort on the part of the President to eliminate all possible factional differences in these two major electoral vote States.

Horner said he had been invited here by the President when the

Morgenthau Gives Newsmen the Razz With Raspberries

Secretary of the Treasury Henry Morgenthau, jr., gave the Treasury press corps the razzberry yesterday.

One by one, he pinned on the lapel of each correspondent, berries not of the Bronx variety, but lucious, red fruit, freshly picked from his Dutchess County farm.

It was the second round in a good-natured bout between Morgenthau and the press. The other day the corps invaded his office decked out in sunflowers, emblem of Gov. Alf Landon's candidacy.

As his Monday press conference was called to order yesterday, Morgenthau, sober-faced, pressed a buzzer. An aid arrived with a tray heaped with raspberries.

"These come from a county that elects and re-elects Presidents," he said, as he drolly proceeded to decorate the corps.

Farley Slated To Get Leave For Campaign

Action Seen as Prelude to His Long-Awaited Resignation.

But Postmaster General Denies He Already Has Quit Office.

By Felix Bruner.

President Roosevelt is expected to announce shortly after his return from Hyde Park today that he has granted a leave of absence to Postmaster General Farley. The Postmaster General has asked for such a leave to permit him to devote his entire attention to his job as Democratic national chairman until election.

The Postmaster General, who is in Atlantic City, told the Associated Press a report printed in New York that he had resigned was incorrect.

W. W. Howes, now First Assistant Postmaster General, will be named acting Postmaster General to serve during Farley's absence.

It was reported in some quarters that the leave of absence would be a prelude to Farley's long-expected resignation and that should President Roosevelt be re-elected he would replace Farley in the Cabinet. This is only one of the Cabinet changes forecast if the New Deal is given four more years.

May Command Any Job.

On the other hand, those close to the Administration feel that if the national chairman is successful in piloting Roosevelt and Garner through another successful campaign, he will be in a position to command almost any job he desires. In other words, his future activities will be up to Farley himself.

Howes has had considerable opportunity to administer the Postoffice Department during Farley's many absences on political errands, and he acted as Postmaster General during his chief's trip to Hawaii a year ago.

During the Democratic National Convention in Philadelphia last week it was reported that announcement of Farley's resignation from the Cabinet was imminent. The Postmaster General would neither affirm nor deny the report, pointing out that it had been persisting for two years. When pressed for an answer to the question of whether his resignation was imminent, he replied:

"You never can tell."

Object of Criticism.

Farley has been subjected to considerable criticism because of his persistence in holding to the Cabinet job, the national chairmanship and the New York State chairmanship. One of the most outspoken of the critics has been Senator Norris (Republican), Nebraska, close friend of President Roosevelt.

At one time it was believed the Postmaster General might resign to become a candidate for Governor of New York, but that possibility apparently has passed. Both President Roosevelt and Farley have been actively attempting to persuade Gov. Lehman to reconsider his decision not to seek another term. There were indications yesterday that Lehman might yield to their persuasion. He was quoted, after a conference with the President at Hyde Park, as saying that he might have an important announcement to make before the end of the week.

It is probable, however, that Farley is considering becoming a candidate for Governor in 1938, and retention of his Cabinet post would enhance his prospect for success.

Temporary relinquishment of the Postmaster generalship is expected to go at least part of the way in meeting criticisms that Farley has been attempting to take care of too many jobs at one time.

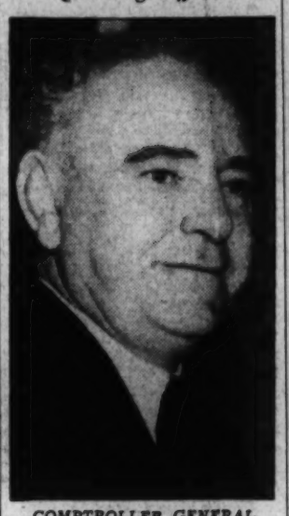

Howes was appointed Assistant Postmaster General at the beginning of the Roosevelt Administration. He is a South Dakota lawyer, and at one time was candidate for Governor of that State. He has long been active in Democratic politics, having been one of the Roosevelt leaders in the 1932 convention at Chicago. He is a member of the Democratic National Committee.

McCarl Assails Loose Spending, Prepares to Quit

Quitting Office

COMPTROLLER GENERAL McCARL.

Sees Vital Need Of Reorganization

By Robert C. Albright.

John Raymond McCarl, the gray-eyed, tight-lipped Scot, who for 15 years has hewed down Federal spending to the limit of the law, yesterday tossed a parting challenge at "extravagance" in Government, then prepared to surrender his Comptroller's portfolio at midnight tonight.

His term has expired, and he can not be reappointed.

The Comptroller General celebrated the event by holding his first open press conference in 15 years. Tomorrow Richard N. Elliott, his assistant, probably will succeed him until President Roosevelt makes a permanent selection for the office.

But McCarl, the "one man Supreme Court" over Government accounting, who has held doggedly to penurious policies, so far as the law would allow him, through an Administration of unprecedented peacetime spending, is not quite ready to quit.

Wants Agencies Reorganized.

He wants to see the regular agencies of Government reorganized, with such consolidations and changes as will eliminate "many, if not all, of the existing special or 'emergency' agencies, which, due to their nature were loosely and extravagantly set up and are tax-consuming in the extreme."

To this end, he offered his services to the special Senate committee, headed by Senator Harry Flood Byrd, of Virginia, which will recommend feasible Government reorganizations and economies to the next Congress.

Senator Byrd warmly acknowledged the proffer.

"I am very happy that he has offered to help us, and I will urge the committee to accept his services to the fullest possible extent," Byrd said. "I know he would be of great value to us."

Earlier in the day, Byrd had conferred with experts of the Brookings Institution, which is making a factual survey of reorganization possibilities, and shortly will submit its recommendations to the Byrd committee.

"We will not do anything until we get their report," the Virginian said.

Lewis Douglas, first New Deal Director of the Budget, who broke with the President over spending policies, has been mentioned as a possible counsel to the committee, but the committee has made no selection.

Wearing the flowing black Windsor tie that gives him a poet-philosopher touch, belying his reputation for tight-fistedness where Federal money is involved, McCarl remained standing throughout his first and last press conference as Comptroller General.

He said he will resume the practice of law, he may write a book, he may travel and he "might take some part in politics." At all events, he will continue his "keen interest in matters governmental, and especially in those problems having relation to the fundamentals of our system of government."

"I am deeply interested in the reorganization study recently authorized to be undertaken by a special committee of which Senator Byrd is chairman, and if the work is to be seriously taken up I would wish to be available to give the Senator and his associates such assistance as I can," he said.

Economy in Reorganization.

"A systematic and sensible reorganization of the regular Government agencies and activities would result not only in a vast monetary saving but would eliminate duplicate and conflicting operations bring together related functions, simplify procedures, and in every respect make for better administration.

"This is a legislative problem and I am in hopes that the next Congress may be so constituted that there may be assured not only a systematic and thorough reorganization of the regular agencies, with proper consolidations and eliminations, but that many, if not all of the existing special or 'emergency' agencies, which, due to their

Wallace Goes To View Areas Hit by Drought

At Least $40,000,000 Is Estimated Available for Relief Work.

By Sidney Olson.

As a sun-scorched day brought new intimations of coming drought disaster to the Central States, Washington officialdom met yesterday to map a program to meet the problem, with the following developments:

Secretary of Agriculture Henry A. Wallace decided he would leave today to make a personal survey of drought conditions in the North Central States.

The Bureau of Agricultural Economics will take the first step to check drought-suffering by pushing through a National livestock feed survey by July 10.

Problem Discussed 3 Hours.

Secretary Wallace, Acting Budget Director Daniel Bell, Aubrey Williams, representing the WPA, and Undersecretary of Agriculture Rexford G. Tugwell, meeting in executive session with the Government's special drought committee headed by Assistant AAA Administrator Jesse W. Tapp, explored the problem for three hours.

Unofficial estimates held that from $40,000,000 to $50,000,000 could be appropriated for drought relief from AAA funds collected under Section 32, earmarking 30 per cent of customs receipts for the farm program.

Scattered rains that touched some moisture-needing areas over the week-end and yesterday were said by meteorologists to be too late to aid parched lands.

Recommendations of the special drought committee will be taken to President Roosevelt today, perhaps by Secretary Wallace before his departure, it was said.

In some quarters the point was raised that the limits set on expenditure of the $1,400,000,000 work-relief fund by the last Congress would hamper the President in a free disposal of funds throughout distressed areas. AAA officials, however, expressed no concern over this point, expressing complete confidence in the President's ability to find the necessary money.

Of $520,000,000 appropriated for drought relief in 1934, about $500,000,000 was spent. The present drought is as severe, officials said, as the 1934 drought was at the same date, but they pointed out that the real havoc to crops and farms comes usually in July and August.

Good Crop Still Possible.

It is their view that while great areas already have been rendered useless due to continued lack of moisture, a good wheat and corn crop are both still possible, providing sufficient rain falls.

According to the Associated Press, the continued heat wave shot the thermometer upward again in Nebraska and Iowa, while a slight northwest breeze modified the distress in northern Kansas.

Topeka suffered the hottest June

Futile Trip for 'Date' With Gable Uses Up $400 of Papa's Bonus

By the United Press.

New York, June 29.—It's all right for Martha Vichnes, 15, to come home and she will not be spanked for spending her father's bonus money to keep an imagined date with Clark Gable in Hollywood.

Her mother, Mrs. Jennie Vichnes, does not mind about the $400 Martha borrowed and squandered, as long as her girl is safe. All is forgiven, and there was almost a festive air in the Vichnes' Brooklyn flat tonight as they prepared to welcome home "the best girl in the world."

Joseph Vichnes, who spent 18 months in France to earn the money his daughter spent in four days, was out looking for a job. But Mrs. Vichnes was emphatic in declaring he would do no spanking when Martha gets home later this week.

"That's the trouble," she said. "Martha's [illegible]dy's pet. He's petted her [illegible] too much. She began to imagine she was beautiful, which she really isn't. She's what we call a mud-gutter blonde."

The mother even left the photographs of Gable on the walls, so it will seem like home to Martha when she gets back.

Martha sat for hours writing to

Labor Defiant Of Steel Firms In Union Drive

Workers Hope to Avoid Bloodshed, Declares Murray, Leader.

By the United Press.

Labor leaders last night defied the united front set up by steel interests to maintain an open shop and pushed forward furiously in a "bloodless" drive to unionize the 500,000 workers in the $5,000,000,000 industry.

Two hundred shrewd, hand-picked organizers already are swarming through the streets of the steel towns. More will be sent into the battle later. They will be paid from the $500,000 fund set aside by the committee for industrial organization, an off-shoot of the American Federation of Labor, which is seeking to bring the steel workers into one big union.

Fewer than 24 hours after the large steel manufacturers, speaking through the American Iron and Steel Institute, announced their "united front" plans with a warning that the unionization drive would threaten interruption of business and "endanger the welfare of the country," labor struck back vigorously.

"If the moguls of steel are interested in preventing strikes, why are they now resorting to intimidation, coercion and discrimination against their employes?" asked Philip Murray, chairman of the steel organizers, in a statement issued in Pittsburgh.

Assails "Royalists."

He emphasized that the unionists "have no interest in fomenting strikes or creating disorders" and would conduct a "bloodless drive" toward success. Murray lashed out at the "royalists of steel" and charged they were seeking to use a "Frankenstein" company union dynasty as a means "to continue an alleged system of collective bargaining."

The statement was issued after Murray had consulted here with John L. Lewis, head of the United Mine Workers and chairman of the Committee for Industrial Organization. Lewis declined to amplify the assertion immediately, but it was learned from other sources that the statement of the steel manufacturers had been expected and the united front anticipated before the vast organization effort was initiated.

"We are not seeking war—but we are ready for it," another labor leader associated with Lewis said.

Meantime, in an office in the Department of Labor sat the New Deal's ace trouble shooter—Assistant Secretary of Labor Edward McGrady. He and his aids are watching the situation closely. Trained conciliation agents are being kept close at hand for immediate use. Daily reports reach McGrady's desk from his own men in the field.

May Become Serious.

"It may easily develop into a serious situation," he said tonight. "No one can tell what will happen."

The campaign, which has pitched the Nation to the verge of one of the worst labor wars in years, was planned with the care of a military drive. The country has been divided into three districts—Eastern, Western and Southern. Clinton S. Golden heads the Eastern district at Pittsburgh, Van A. Bitner, the Western district at Chicago, and William Mitch the Southern district at Birmingham.

Presiding over this trio as the generalissimo of strategy is Murray, who came to this country at the age of 18 from Scotland, whence came Andrew Carnegie to build up the great steel industry which now has become a battle ground. At the top of the heap is Lewis, who relaxes by quoting the Greek classics and whose father was chased out of Iowa for his early attempts to organize the miners in that State.

In the background but a vital part of the fight ahead is a policy laid down by President Roosevelt in the early days of the New Deal that no one shall be allowed to go hungry. Under this policy the Government has fed and provided other aid to strikers who were placed in the same class as the unemployed. Business protested to no avail. Thus as organized labor makes its second desperate attempt to "crack" the hitherto impregnable steel industry, workers have reasonable assurance that they and their families will not starve while the battle goes on.

Rally at Homestead.

The first stage of the campaign does not call for actual invasion by organizers of the mills. The first blow will fall around beer barrels at picnics and at a giant rally planned for next Sunday at Homestead, Pa., where scores were slain in a bloody strike on July 4, 1892.

The first rumblings of the threatened labor war were heard in Wall street yesterday when a resumption in selling of steels came after the group had met slight support after an irregular opening. United States Steel was down a point, while Bethlehem broke 2 points. The break came in the face of reports that steel operations for this week would be 74 per cent of capacity, a new high since May 20, 1930.

The captains of the steel organizers do not expect to achieve their goal overnight. Lewis told friends it probably would take "many months" and that the struggle might continue throughout the winter. Battle plans have been laid for such a contingency.

Strike Wave Feared.

This feeling is shared by Federal officials who are apprehensive at the restlessness of workers in other industries and threats of a wave of strikes which would endanger the Nation's economic recovery. Reports indicate that the industrial front is comparably peaceful today.

There are some "sore spots." More than 10,000 workers of the RCA Victor plant at Camden, N. J., are on strike. James B. Carey, president of the National United Electrical and Radio Workers Union was arrested there yesterday charged with inciting a riot in connection with the strike. The workers are caught in the serious internal row raging within the portals of organized labor's hitherto united house.

Lewis, proponent of the one large union idea, has broken with William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, who fights to preserve the traditional craft unions. Whether the steel fight will serve to unite the house of labor against industry is not known, but labor experts say it will prevent Lewis' organization from moving as speedily as had been contemplated to organize automobile, rubber and other workers into vertical unions.

Politics and People

By Franklyn Waltman

THE old adage that "nothing succeeds like success" has a greater truth and force in politics than in other walks of life. It is human nature to prefer to be associated with and do business with successful people. But in politics success or the prospect of success has a greater appeal than the whims of human nature.

WALTMAN.

It is an absolute necessity for politicians and others with a direct interest in Government to be on the winner's side as early as possible. Those who rode with Franklin D. Roosevelt prior to the 1932 convention, for instance, have ever since received preferential treatment.

Thus there is in politics what is known as the psychology of the band wagon movement. Every campaign manager makes a super-human effort to convince the voters that his candidate is certain of victory. He regards that as his most important task. Once he is able to make his claim seem plausible and reasonable, there always takes place a sizable increment in his candidate's strength.

Gov. Alf M. Landon benefited greatly from the band wagon psychology in his preconvention campaign for the Republican Presidential nomination. He tied securely to his candidacy sufficient delegate votes to place him in the lead many months ago. He loomed as the choice of the rank and file in informal polls. After that it was easy. Uninstructed delegates were persuaded he would be the nominee and they scrambled to be by his side at the hour of victory.

As things now stand, however, Gov. Landon's opponent, President Roosevelt, enjoys the advantage of band wagon psychology. Despite the fact that a number of political writers of standing are ready to stake their reputations on the prediction that Gov. Landon will win in November, the average voter seems convinced that Mr. Roosevelt will be reelected. Indeed, even some Republicans think so.

There are certain influential people, chiefly for business and professional reasons, who strive to tie themselves to the winning candidate—and to do nothing that would be offensive to him. This is a distinct advantage enjoyed by Mr. Roosevelt and one that must be taken into consideration in any survey of campaign prospects this year.

It is for that reason that John Hamilton, the Republican national chairman and Landon campaign manager, has reiterated in the last two weeks the claim that not only will his candidate be elected but that he will carry at least 42 States. He has proclaimed that Gov. Landon has New York in the bag—not for the information of New Yorkers but to stir enthusiasm among Republican workers in the prairie States and to sow doubt in the minds of those who think President Roosevelt is as good as re-elected.

Of course, Mr. Hamilton has not convinced anyone who knows anything about politics that Gov. Landon will carry 42 States. It is not even plausible because there are ten Southern States traditionally Democratic, except when their passions are swept by such fundamental issues as in 1928—and even then six of those States remained anchored to the Democratic Party.

But more interesting than the reaction of the voters to the successful candidate—to the man riding the band wagon—is the reaction of the man himself. As success comes to him, things seem to fall his way. He appears inspired to do the right thing at the right time—to say the right thing when it should be said. And when he has started to make mistakes, everything he turns his hand to seems to crumble into ashes.

The classic example in politics of the latter is the Herbert Hoover Administration. From the beginning that Administration seemed to be cursed by the political gods. When the economic crash came, Mr. Hoover struggled as probably no man in the Presidency since Lincoln struggled, but without avail.

Blunder followed blunder. The day he predicted "prosperity was just around the corner" the stock market took another disastrous dip. He lost the confidence of the country. A Democratic House was elected. His best-laid plans went sour. Forces beyond his control constantly baffled him—and whatever he said or did turned out to have been wrong.

On the other hand, during the first year of the New Deal whatever President Roosevelt did brought acclaim. Events beyond his control appeared opportunely to erase his mistakes. Even the grim reaper of death appeared to be on his side as his major and most effective political foes were taken from this earth at crucial moments. Those enemies who remained weakened themselves by blunders just as they were striking at his most vulnerable parts.

Even as opposition to the President mounted, nature seemed to come to his aid, bringing catastrophies which gave him an opportunity to come to the rescue and display his humanitarian talent and Federal largess.

But then Lady Luck last winter seemed to have departed from the White House. The President commenced making mistakes. He made speeches which annoyed his closest followers and cheered his adversaries to believe that at last his Achilles heel had been exposed. Having started to make mistakes—having started to lose "the breaks" instead of getting them—his enemies thought it would be but a period of time when, baffled and confused, all his efforts would be futile.

But Lady Luck seems to have returned to the White House. Mr. Roosevelt has leveled his capsizing boat. He guided the Democratic National Convention throughout five days without a serious mistake. He rejected the advice of his counselors in writing his acceptance speech—and did an admirable job. Even the rain stopped and the moon came out Saturday night. And as a climax, a drought descends over the Western plains, creating the opportunity for Mr. Roosevelt to win the gratitude of the people of States vital in this campaign for his help and assistance. Watch the drought news, for that event, during the next few weeks, may settle the outcome of next November's election.

45 to Join Ranks Of District Police

Forty-five men will be added to the police department by the end of July, Maj. Ernest W. Brown, chief of police, said yesterday. A Congressional appropriation permits the addition of 25 men and the remainder will fill vacancies that have occurred in the last six months.

Some of the new men will be assigned to precincts tomorrow from the police school. This will necessitate minor shifts in personnel, Major Brown said.

Results of recent Civil Service examinations for promotions will be made public this week. Vacancies of two sergeantcies and one lieutenantcy will be filled by the men making the highest averages in the examinations, it was said.

Rumors of a drastic shake-up in the Department and the retirement of two police inspectors were denied yesterday by Major Brown. He said that none of the inspectors or captains has made application for retirement.

Laborer Injured By Dynamite Blast

Charles Barton, 35, Berryville, Md., was seriously injured yesterday when he drove a pick through a stick of dynamite on a construction project of the Washington Suburban Sanitary Commission at Seek's Corner, near Silver Spring, Md.

Barton, employed as a laborer, was digging a ditch with several others when his pick pierced the explosive. Dirt and gravel hurled by the blast tore large sections of skin from his body.

The Bladensburg rescue squad took Barton to Providence Hospital where his condition was said to be critical.

His companions were not injured. Barton is married and has eight young children. The oldest is 12 years.

General Strike Probable, Says Steel Attorney

Reed, Counsel in Weirton Case, Defends G. O. P. Labor Plank.

By the Associated Press.

Pittsburgh, June 29.—Attorney Earl F. Reed, a key figure in the steel operators' battle against New Deal legislation, predicted tonight labor's unionization drive may lead to a general strike of American labor unions.

His statement came while a struggle impends between capital and labor over organization of the steel industry's 500,000 workers.

Reed, who successfully combated the original national labor relations act in the Weirton case during NRA days, is counsel for the Wheeling Steel Co., whose New Boston plant at Portsmouth, Ohio, has been closed a month by a strike.

The attorney said:

"A group of radicals has taken complete charge of the community, without interference from either State or local officials.

"Trained agitators are being sent to scores of our now peaceful communities and will create the same situation and a general sympathetic walkout by other unions unless the people awaken."

The committee for industrial unionization, sponsored by John L. Lewis, has sent about 200 organizers into the field to undertake the job of placing all steel workers under one union banner.

Philip Murray, chairman of the committee, today charged that the labor plank in the Republican platform had been "dictated."

Attorney Reed commented:

"The labor plank in the Republican platform goes on record against coercion or intimidation in labor matters 'from any source.'

"Anyone who disagrees with such a plank must believe it is all right to have coercion and intimidation on the part of organizers; otherwise, there could be no valid objection to such a plank.

"What is going on at Portsmouth, Ohio, indicates clearly the union believes such to be its rights. Its so-called 'peaceful picketing' consists of mobs around the mill, which refuse to permit anyone to go in or leave, even members of the management.

Cites English Strike.

"England learned its lesson in its general strike. Now, labor unions there must have their books audited and there is no picketing or sympathetic striking."

The attorney declared that in one instance at Portsmouth two national guard colonels were sent to investigate and "couldn't get through the picket lines." He added: "They had to get a union pass."

Reed said he believed 25 or 30 men were "guilty of being an accessory to murder" in connection with the killing of a man by gunfire at the New Boston plant. The attorney described the incident as a "cowardly attack."

Industry Stands Pat.

New York, June 29 (AP).—The vast steel industry stood pat today on its announced intention to resist unionization activities of the Committee for Industrial Organization, while a prominent member of that group said the industry's position would "redouble efforts of the organized labor movement."

Sidney Hillman, close associate of John L. Lewis, C. I. O head, asserted:

"What they (the industry) are fighting is not the closed shop, but the right of people to be organized. Labor isn't going to back up. This will just redouble efforts of the organized labor movement."

Hillman, in addition to his post on the committee, heads the Amalgamted Clothing Workers of America. Lewis is the head of the United Mine Workers, as well as leader of C. I. O.

The industry, speaking through its association, the American Iron & Steel Institute, declined to amplify its statement of yesterday that all its resources would be used against the unionization efforts of "persons and organizations not connected with the industry."

"All quiet," a spokesman said.

$500,000 Fund Ready to Unite Steel Workers

Only Central Control Can Spell Success, Says I. T. U. President.

By the Associated Press.

Indianapolis, June 29.—Charles P. Howard, president of the International Typographical Union and secretary of the committee for industrial organization, sponsored by John L. Lewis, tonight declared a fund of $500,000 had been provided for support of campaign for organization of steel workers.

Howard's statement was issued following one by Earl F. Reed, at Pittsburgh, that labor's unionization drive might lead to a general strike of American labor unions.

"Promises for the future will not cause the workmen in the steel industry to forget the persecution of the past," Howard said. "When the organization campaign was initiated it was expected the masters of steel would give all possible opposition. Those who are directing the campaign and who are actively engaged in organizing the workmen have had years of experience. They know all successful unions have been organized over the opposition of employers.

Organization Needed.

"With few exceptions collective bargaining is accepted by employers only after their employes have been effectively organized.

"This condition obtains in the steel industry where the great corporations have been successful in defeating trade union organization in the past."

Howard asserted the committee expected wage increase, vacations with pay and company unions to be used to defeat organization of steel companies.

"The campaign initiated and supported by the committee for industrial organization will be successful," Howard said. "We are offering to the steel workers a basis for organization which they have demanded and on which they will accept. A fund of $500,000 has been provided and the resources for support of the campaign are adequate to meet and overcome any opposition that can be offered.

"We know division of the workmen into craft unions means defeat. Unity and centralized control means success. This is the first time a determined effort has been made to organize the steel workers upon an industrial basis and it is the first time a campaign of organization has been adequately financed."

Howard said his organization accepted the declarations of both Republican and Democratic Party platforms that workers have the right to organize for collective bargaining free from influence of employers and their agents.

"The attitude of the masters of steel in attempting to prevent organization of their employes is un-American and out of harmony with what is accepted as good public policy," Howard said.

Smith to Make 3 Talks Against Administration

Will Not Directly Support Landon in Campaign, Friend Asserts.

Copyright, 1936, by United Press.

Alfred E. Smith, snubbed by the Philadelphia convention when he and others suggested nomination of some "genuine Democrat" instead of President Roosevelt, plans to make at least three campaign speeches attacking the New Deal, a close friend of the former Governor said last night.

Smith will not directly support the Republican candidacy of Gov. Alf M. Landon, the United Press informant said, but his attack on the Administration would have that effect inferentially since a vote for Landon would be the only course open to those seeking to protest against the New Deal who did not find any of the left wing parties attractive.

As this intimation came of Smith's role in the coming campaign, Senator William E. Borah, of Idaho, who still is a question mark in the Republican side of the political fence, announced he would leave today for his home, where he must decide by July 11 whether he will seek re-election to the Senate.

Marks 71st Birthday.

Borah, 71 years old yesterday, refused to discuss politics. There was no special celebration and he went through his usual daily schedule.

Smith's friends did not indicate what line of attack Smith's speeches would take, but observers believed they would follow through on the criticisms he made against Mr. Roosevelt in his Liberty League speech and in the "take-a-walk" message to the Democratic convention, in which he was joined by four others.

Those who joined Smith in this message were former Gov. Joseph B. Ely of Massachusetts, Bainbridge Colby, former Senator James A. Reed and Daniel Cohalan, of New York. Ely already has announced he will take the stump actively for Landon, and today's Saturday Evening Post will contain an article by Ely assailing the New Deal for its "Alice in Wonderland economics."

Supply and Demand.

In his article Ely asserts that the leaders of the New Deal "are obsessed by the amazing notion that they could, through governmental dictation, untangle the economic snarl and follow up their achievement by a continuing dictatorship that would result in a balance between supply and demand."

"Greed for political power," it continues, "ambition to stand forth as 'the greatest President or the last President,' susceptibility to cheers from the crowd, and the obsequious agreement of swarming political parasites, all had their effect."

The quoted phrase was a reference to a statement attributed to President Roosevelt in the "Red" charges of William Wirt, Gary, Ind., school superintendent, in 1934. Wirt claimed to have heard that Mr. Roosevelt told a friend that in view of the economic situation of the country he would become either the greatest President or the last.

Loose-Thinking Liberals.

Ely's article also pictured the Administration as people with "loose-thinking liberals and parlor pinks lording it over freemen." He refers contemptuously to "a poultry professor dictating our monetary policies."

The objections to the New Deal which Smith and Ely mentioned in their convention eve message, and which they may be expected to emphasize in their speeches, included:

Government interference in business, unbalanced budget; tariff policies; heavy spending; encroachment on the judiciary; flouting of the Constitution; political use of relief funds.

Woodrum Named For Congress Seat

Roanoke, Va., June 29 (AP).—Representative Clifton A. Woodrum today was declared the Democratic nominee for the Sixth District seat in the House of Representatives in a formal statement by A. M. Bowman, jr., chairman of the Sixth District committee of the party which will meet at Hotel Patrick Henry at 3 p. m. tomorrow for reorganization as well as for a discussion of campaign plans.

In his statement Bowman called upon "all loyal Democrats as well as all other voters who desire vigorous and capable representation of the district in Congress" to support Woodrum, who reopens his office in the Federal building today.

Fitzgerald Admits Part In Kidnaping of Hamm

St. Paul, June 29 (AP).—Charles (Big Fitz) Fitzgerald, Los Angeles, pleaded guilty in Federal Court today to complicity in the $100,000 kidnaping of William Hamm, jr., in June, 1933. He will be sentenced July 7.

The plea of Fitzgerald, indicted as a participant in the actual seizure of the brewing company head, reduced to three the number who will stand trial for the crime July 14. They are Alvin Karpis, Edmund Bartholmey, former Bensenville, Ill., postmaster in whose home it was charged Hamm was held, and John Peifer, former St. Paul night club owner, named as "finger man" in the case.

Second Mishap Strikes Normandie in 10 Days

New York, June 29 (AP).—The French liner Normandie was involved in her second accident in ten days today when, while trying to dock at ebb tide, the ship was swung by the wind so close to the pier housing that the vessel's flying bridge struck a steel girder and was buckled back nearly 15 feet.

The accident occurred at the Normandie's slip on the south side of the West Forty-eighth street docks. The previous accident occured in the English Channel when the Normandie was struck by a British airplane.

Roosevelt

two met June 14 at Vincennes, Ind., where the Chief Executive dedicated the George Rogers Clark Memorial.

"Do you think all rifts in the party have been healed in Illinois?" he was asked.

"I haven't talked with Kelly," he replied, "but I have no reason to believe he will support any but the Democratic ticket."

He also predicted that the State Democratic ticket would win.

Asked about the chances of the Lemke party Presidential ticket in Illinois, Horner gave his personal views after emphasizing he had not talked about this with the President.

He said the North Dakotans' prospect for cutting into Democratic strength looked "ominous on paper," but otherwise he thought they were not so good.

"They certainly won't get the farm vote from Roosevelt in Illinois," he added, "because the President has made farming a livelihood."

He asserted that labor had had the President's "concern from the first" and he could not "imagine labor going anywhere but for Roosevelt."

Horner said he had inspected the New York-New Jersey elevated highway yesterday and he believed a similar one should be constructed connecting Chicago's west side with the center of the city.

The President saw no other callers during the day.

Convention Result Elates Quaker City

Philadelphia, June 29 (AP).—Business men were agreed today that the Democratic National Convention last week was about the biggest and best thing that had happened to Philadelphia in many years.

The mayor, S. Davis Wilson, reckoned it brought $10,000,000 worth of business to the city. The intangible values, he said, were much greater.

C. Pitman Baker, president of the Philadelphia Hotel Association, said that "we can't figure the benefits of the convention in dollars and cents," but felt that the city "made a name for itself that will be carried to every State in the Union. That is going to be of lasting benefit."

The Philadelphia Rapid Transit Co. reported an increase of $110,000 in car fares. The company, which operates virtually all the taxicabs in the city, estimated receipts were $26,000 above the average week.

$50,000 Is Left By Clara D. Noyes

An estate valued at approximately $50,000 was left by Miss Clara D. Noyes, war-time director of the Red Cross Nursing Service, it was shown in District Supreme Court yesterday when a petition for the probate of her will was filed.

Miss Noyes, who died June 3, asked that her brother, Charles R. Noyes, of Old Lyme, Conn., and her sisters, Miss Martha Noyes, also of Old Lyme, and Mrs. Laura N. Barnum, of Tarrytown, N. Y., receive the income from the estate for life and upon the death of all three, the estate is to be paid by the Washington Loan & Trust Co. to their descendants.

Benes Resigns League Assembly Presidency

By the Associated Press.

Geneva, June 29.—Dr. Eduard Benes, president of Czechoslovakia, resigned the presidency of the League of Nations Assembly tonight because of the former office.

Dr. Benes was elected president of Czechoslovakia December 18, 1935, succeeding Dr. Thomas G. Masaryk, the "Little Father" of Czechoslovakia, who resigned because of his advanced age. Dr. Benes had been foreign minister since Czechoslovakia was created following the World War. He also was president of the council of the League of Nations several times.

Routine Work Occupies Both Party Leaders

Landon Works on Speech; Roosevelt Interviews Murphy, Horner.

With the air still vibrant with echoes of two major party conventions, the campaign settled down yesterday to political routine—the humdrum work of planning, organizing and speechmaking to turn out the vote in November.

With Post Master General James A. Farley in temporary retirement, Democratic activity centered around Hyde Park conferences. Gov. Alf Landon prepared to call campaign advisers around him at Estes Park, Colo. Representative William Lemke, Union Party candidate, assailed Secretary of Agriculture Wallace in his home town—Des Moines—and announced plans to open third party headquarters in Chicago.

Democratic leaders, seeking to organize their speakers' bureau to carry out the President's "economic freedom" pledge into the hustings, cast far and wide for talent.

Developments on a wide front were:

The President, "resting" at Hyde Park, opened what observers believed to be a series of conferences on campaign strategy, leading off with Gov. Horner, of Illinois, and Frank Murphy, Philippines commissioner, according to the Associated Press. He will meet Postmaster General Farley here later in the week.

Landon Busy on Speech.

While John D. M. Hamilton, Republican chairman, aranged organization meetings and conferences in the East. Gov. Landon, in the Colorado Rockies, worked on his acceptance speech, to be delivered in Topeka, July 23. Charles P. Taft, Ralph W. Robey and Early H. Taylor, of his advisory staff, will join him in the next few days.

Progressives, who will hold a conference all their own to determine a campaign course of action, will announce the time and place of their meeting within a month, Senator Robert M. La Follette said here.

A reorganization of the Republican Senatorial campaign committee, forced by the resignation of Senator Daniel Hastings, of Delaware, as chairman was announced by Senate Minority Leader McNary. Senator John G. Townsend, jr., of Delaware, will succeed Hastings as chairman. Senators Frazier, of North Dakota; Steiwer, of Oregon; Davis, of Pennsylvania; and Gibson, of Vermont, were added to the committee.

While Senator William E. Borah, of Idaho, continued silent in Washington, Ezra R. Whitla, Idaho Republican National committeeman, predicted in Couer D' Alene, Idaho, that Borah will "wholeheartedly support Landon and Knox," according to the Associated Press.

From New Hampshire came the announcement that George E. Moses, who took to writing for a living after failing of re-election to the Senate, will seek to return to the Senate, opposing Senator Henry W. Keyes and Gov. H. Styles Bridges in the November primaries.

The Socialist Party continued its candidate on a speechmaking round of every State in the Union. Earl W. Browder, Communist candidate, launched a campaign "to reach 10,000,000 voters" and "flood the country from one end to the other with Red literature."

Gov. Herbert Lehman of New York, who had been reported yielding to Democratic overtures to stand for re-eletcion, continued to delay his decision.

To Iowa farmers, Representative Lemke, speaking in Des Moines, reiterated the Union Party's "guaranteed cost of production pledge," and struck again at Secretary Wallace, according to the Associated Press.

With either party in power, Lemke told the corn belt folk, "you'll get Wall Street back on the scenes."

Lemke said the following is the "true story" of the AAA and processing taxes:

"Forgot the Dollar."

"Finally he slipped a dime back in the other pocket and through his propaganda department shouted 'Look at the dime I gave you' so loud that the farmer forgot the dollar he took."

Associated Press reports from Cleveland were that Dr. Francis E. Townsend, head of the old-age pension movement that bears his name, withheld an opinion on Lemke and the new Union Party movement. He said "all of that" will be put up to the convention of the National Townsend clubs at Cleveland July 15 to 19.

In Masillon, Ohio, however, Gen. Jacob Coxey, of "Coxey's army" fame, declared he would campaign for Lemke and the new Union Party.

In Washington, Treasury officials ruled informally yesterday that no tax is due on Roosevelt "nominator" tickets purchased by Democrats, viewing them as "contributions" rather than as "admission" fees, on which taxes are collected.

Woman Admits Killing Mother By Firing Bed

'Didn't Mean It,' She Says, Telling of Drinking and Quarreling.

By the United Press.

Winston-Salem, N. C., June 29.—Babbling incoherently, Sadie Lawson, a nervous, fidgety woman of 35, looked out a tiny window of her jail cell across this twin city toward the smouldering ruins of her home tonight and said she didn't mean to burn her invalid mother to death, if she did.

Charges of the first degree murder of her mother, Mrs. Lizzie Lawson, 58, were filed today against the confessed "torch killer," employe of a local cigarette factory.

The aged mother died yesterday of burns suffered in a blaze at their home. Firemen took her to a hospital from the burning one-story house. Her daughter, first denying complicity, admitted she poured gasoline on the sick woman's bed and set fire to it "because mother and I had quarreled."

"I did it, I did it," she sobbed when officers questioned her.

Tonight, after a day in the cell block, Sadie wanted to talk.

"I don't know what I was doing, honest, I don't," she told W. F. Anderson, chief of police.

"If I did this, I don't know why, because I dearly loved my mother.

"I supported her for 21 years and always loved her. I worked in a cigarette factory since I was 14.

"I don't remember much of what happened. The only thing I remember is pulling my mother out of the burning bed and pouring two buckets of water on the bed. I can still see the flames. Then everything went black. That's all I can remember.

"We had been drinking. I drank half a pint of whisky and my mother drank about a pint. Then we started quarreling and I don't remember what happened."

About two weeks ago Sadie and her mother had an argument, Chief Anderson said he learned. Mrs. Lawson struck Sadie on the head with a broom handle.

"Neighbors say her mind hasn't been exactly right since then," the officer said.

A preliminary hearing probably will be held Wednesday or Thursday before Judge Bailey B. Lipfert in municipal court, Anderson said. The judge is expected to order a sanity hearing.

Funeral for the mother will be held tomorrow.

Gas Rate Hearing Set for August 10

The proposed gas rate reduction hearing was scheduled definitely yesterday by the Public Utilities Commission to begin on August 10. This was the date requested by People's Counsel William A. Roberts and agreed to by counsel for the Washington Gas Light Co.

The purpose of the hearing is to apply the new sliding scale to gas company profits with the aim of reducing rates to consumers on September 1. The sliding scale requires that 50 per cent of the company's profits between 6½ and 7¾ per cent shall be applied to reducing gas charges.

The commission also set July 13 as the tentative date for a hearing on the application of the Capital Transit Co. to increase by 40 its one-man cars.

Wirephoto: Divorcee Found Slain in Hotel

Mrs. Florence Castle, who was beaten to death in her hotel room at Chicago yesterday while her 7-year-old son James (right) awakened by the commotion told police he talked to "a man with a black mask that hit mama."

Police Capt. William O'Brien, of Chicago, looks at inscription scrawled on mirror with lipstick in room where body of Mrs. Castle was found. It reads, "Black Legion came."

clared his love for his "patient" and persisted in asking "who was she out with last night?"

The whole setting of the crime impressed police as a stage deliberately set to mislead investigators after the killer fled and the boy went back to sleep.

The bedroom was in disorder. Scribbled on a mirror—with the dead woman's lipstick—were the words:

"Black Legion.
"Came," or "game."

Beneath the words were a skull and crossbones.

Two Men Arrested.

A window leading to the fire escape was open. On the landing outside was Mrs. Castle's purse, open and empty. After the son went downstairs to the hotel desk after sunrise and reported his mother was dead—he said he was too frightened to do it before—police took two men into custody for questioning.

One was Schaps. The other was Robert Taylor, 30, jobless New York salesman, who admitted taken Mrs. Castle on a boat ride yesterday.

Police said they believed Taylor's story and expected to release him.

Shortly after Taylor surrendered for questioning, Mrs. Castle's second husband—she was twice divorced—appeared voluntarily at police headquarters.

She was married to him for four years after her divorce from James B. Thompson, her first husband, and her mother said.

Mrs. Polfus said Mrs. Castle was a daughter by a first marriage. She was born in St. Louis in 1912, and christened Florence New. Soon after the family moved to Chicago, when Florence was 16, she eloped to Brown Point, Ind., with Thompson, who then lived in Cleveland, Ohio. The son, James, was born in Pittsburgh. Under a divorce agreement, he spent two months of the year with his mother and the remainder in the custody of his father. He came to Chicago alone, by train, on Sunday from Wilkes-Barre, Pa., where he had been living with his grandparents, Peter and Bertha Thompson.

Cleveland, Ohio, June 29 (AP).—Movement of iron ore from Lake Erie docks to interior furnaces for the first 21 days this month shows a gain of almost 50 per cent over the same period last year, H. M. Griggs, manager of the Ore & Coal Exchange reported today.

Women Beaten By N. C. Band, Trial Reveals

Victims' Fear of Reprisal Hampers Inquiry of Secret Group.

By the Associated Press.

Wilmington, N. C., June 29.—A Columbus County grand jury began attempts today to pierce the reticence of reprisal-fearing victims of a band of night-riding women-floggers, while Solicitor J. J. Burney announced a "war to the death" against the secret group operating, he said, under a "law and order" pretext.

Foreman Hackett Applewhite, directing the grand jury investigation ordered against the masked nightriders at Whiteville by Judge R. Hunt Parker, said fear of the victims was hindering an inquiry, but that "some progress" had been made.

He said 30 witnesses had been questioned, and that 30 more were to be questioned.

The floggings and other mistreatment began seven months ago, he said, in a part of Columbus County in or near the town of Clarendon, near the South Carolina line.

Three Names Obtained.

Applewhite said he had obtained the names of three alleged floggers.

He said all the victims told him that members of the mob flogged them because the victims "were undesirable and are not wanted in this section."

Applewhite said the Clarendon area had a reputation of lawlessness and that "many criminals" frequently came from there. He said the victims told him the floggers asserted they would uphold law and order.

Applewhite said six victims—four women and two men—had been questioned.

Revealed at Trial.

The nocturnal activities of the remote area were revealed during the trial of Pink King on charges of criminal assault on the 15-year-old daughter of Bertha Fowler. He was acquitted but later was charged with a lesser offense.

During the proceedings Mrs. Fowler refused to take off her hat and when she was forced to do so by court order, her head was revealed to have been shaved. Judge Hunt immediately directed an investigation of the alleged guilty parties.

During King's trial the nine-year-old brother of the attacked girl was disqualified a sa witness when he said he had never heard of Christ or God. Applewhite pointed toward this as proof that the isolated section was "an ideal place for intimidation and wholesale depredation."

Rio Grande Valley Area Is Flooded Under Rains

Eagle Pass, Tex., June 29 (AP).—This Rio Grande Valley area of southwest Texas was flooded under driving rains today as the State's largest river strained to carry its unusal burden of waters.

In a triangle area pointed at Eagle Pass, Del Rio and Uvalde, downpours from 16.27 inches to 2 inches were recorded. The rains dipped into Mexico in the area opposite the Eagle Pass section and the lower Piedras Negras, Mexico, population was reported fleeing to the hills.

Heavy rains also were reported throughout the rest of southwest

Police Fail to Find Body of Student

Harbor police dragged the Potomac River until dusk last night in a futile effort to recover the body of Jack Hayes Ridlebaugh, 21, George Washington Univeristy student, who was drowned Sunday afternoon.

Ridlebaugh, who lived at 812 Somerset place northwest, was thrown into the rapids about half a mile above Chain Bridge when the canoe he was paddling with a friend, Stuart Wright, 24, of 1202 Delafield place northwest, overturned.

Wright told police that he and Ridlebaugh had paddled up the river until the current became too strong and when they turned around the rushing water upset the frail craft. Wright managed to swim to safety, but his friend sank about 15 feet off shore.

Employing grappling hooks, police said they were hampered by the depth and swiftness of the water.

'Executioner' Of Black Legion Admits Murder

By the Associated Press.

Detroit, June 29.—Dayton Dean pleaded guilty today to the Black Legion murder which brought to light the existence of the black-cloaked terrorist socety.

Appearing before Circuit Judge Joseph A. Moynihan, the Black Legion "executioneer" said formally that he had kidnaped and slain Charles A. Poole, young WPA worker, the night of May 12.

"Why are you pleading guilty?" the court asked.

"Because I am guilty," Dean said.

The reply of the burly former city employe was given in a firm voice, but the calm manner in which he accused 12 others of participating in the slaying at their examination two weeks ago was missing.

Dean confessed soon after his arrest that he shot Poole to death in the presence of other Black Legion members who accused Poole, a non-member, of beating his wife. The accusation later was found to be false.

Dean's account of death plots against political foes of the night riders, of floggings, and of torch squads sent out to burn the homes of men the Black Legion suspected of being Communists, have led to the arrest of nearly 50 men who are held for trial on charges from assault to murder.

Accused Guilty In Park Death; Mercy Is Urged

Death Penalty Barred by Finding of Jury, Out Two Hours.

By the Associated Press.

Richmond, Va. (Tuesday), June 30.—A jury in Federal Court early today convicted Earl Connor Williams of the Battlefield Memorial Park murder of Fannie Kurz but added a recommendation of mercy. The jury had been out a little over two hours.

By its mercy recommendation the jury prevented capital punishment.

Callom B. Jones, Richmond attorney, told the jury in the defense's closing argument there was no evidence aside from purported "confessions" to show that Williams had any connection with the fatal wounding of Miss Kurz the night of May 20, 1934.

Sterling Hutcheson, United States district attorney, closed for the Government after almost six hours of argument.

Hutcheson said that since the defense spoke repeatedly of Williams as a "boy" in mental age, the jurors should bear in mind that the average mental age of adults is from 13½ to 14 years, according to the testimoney of experts.

He urged that the jurors not be swayed by sympathy for the defendant and thereby "overlook" the fact that a woman met her death in the crime for which Williams is being tried.

The Government completed its case against Williams today with rebuttal testimony against his alibi that he was in St. Louis at the time.

The defense, which rested its case at the reopening of the trial in Federal District Court this morning, moved that the court direct a verdict for his acquittal. Judge Luther May overruled the motion.

England Seeks Stronger Navy; U. S. Consents

By the Associated Press.

London, June 29.—The crumbling structure of naval limitation received two staggering blows today.

Japan officially refused to adhere to the 1936 London treaty, signed by Great Britain, the United States and France, and it was learned the British would shortly invoke the escalator clause of the 1930 treaty to save excess destroyers.

Formal notification to Washington and Tokyo that Britain wants to invoke the escalator clause will be sent within a few days, diplomatic quarters said.

The United States will benefit by Britain's use of the escalator, which will free all signatories to the same extent. The United States also has built over treaty limits, but her destroyers are older.

Submarine restrictions of the treaty may be upset by a subsequent invocation of the clause by Japan.

The British previously explained in notes to Washington and Tokyo that they want to retain destroyers because non-signatories have built more than 200 submarines since 1930.

Observers said it was too early to judge the full effect of Japan's refusal to adhere to the new treaty, officially conveyed to the foreign office by the counsellor of the Japanese embassy, but agreed it jeopardizes and probably nullifies one of the main provisions of the treaty—the 14-inch gun limit on battleships. Unless Japan and Italy agree to smaller guns before April 1, 1937, 16-inch guns will continue to be legal.

Britain recently asked the United State and Japan to waive the destroyer limitations of the 1930 treaty to permit her to keep 40,000 tons of overbuilt ships. The United States objected however, responding that the proper way to escape treaty provisions would be to use the escalator clause. This Britain will now do.

U. S. Willing to Accede.

By the Associated Press.

The American Government already has notified Great Britain that it is willing to accede to the British proposal for an increase in the destroyer strength of navies providing London assumes responsibility for the increase.

Formal notice that Britain must assume this responsibility was dispatched to the British government early this month.

While neither government has published the text of this correspondence, the United States is understood to have taken the position that the only way for a government to so increase its naval power is for that country to invoke the escalator clause of the 1930 London naval treaty.

The State Department took this stand after consulting the American high naval command. The escalator clause provides that if "the requirements of national security" of any one of the signatories "are materially affected" by new construction of a nonsignatory, the signatory may make whatever increase it considers necessary, providing it first notifies the others of its intentions. The others then are free to do likewise.

Polish Jews Call Strike for Today

Warsaw, June 29 (Jewish Telegraph Agency).—Jews made ready tonight to hold a nation-wide general strike tomorrow in protest against the decision of the Radom District Court sentencing 11 Jews to varying sentences in prison because of disorders in Przytyk March 9.

Leaders of the movement assert the murderers of two Jews went unpunished, while a Jew was sentenced for the death of a Christian. They also point out that Jewish defendants drew the longest prison terms.

All Jewish organizations will strike except the Agudath Israel, extreme orthodox group. The Bund, Jewish labor organization, will hold a separate protest strike.

Jewish nwespapers were confiscated in Wilno for publishing strike appeals. Strike posters were torn down. The Warsaw Yiddish daily, Haint, will demand tomorrow that Jewish deputies in parilament resign in protest against the decision.

The Przytyk riots set off a general strike March 17 of virtually the entire Jewish population of 3,500,000.

'Victim' of Air Crash Reported at N. Y. Home

New York, June 29 (AP).—The possibility that three and not four persons were drowned in the crash of an airplane in Lake Champlain Saturday became known tonight when a supposed passenger on the ship was located at his home in Queens.

G. W. Erickson, a salesman, explained he had planned to be a passenger on a ship piloted by Steve Kaye which participated in a goodwill flight from New York to Montreal, Canada, but had been unable to make the trip.

At his home Erickson commented: "I cannot understand how my name got into the toll of the dead as I told the others I could not go with them because I had made arrangements to go to Pittsburgh. The only explanation I can offer is that they forgot to remove my name from the passenger list."

Amsterdam, June 29 (AP).—The Bank of the Netherlands reduced its discount rate today to 3½ per cent from 4 per cent.

Refined Sugar Exports Decline 45 Per Cent

New York, June 29 (AP).—Refined sugar exports by the United States during the first five months of this year totaled 19,126 long tons compared with 34,783 tons in the similar period last year, says Lamborn & Co.

The decrease was about 45 per cent and the total the smallest for any comparable period since 1933.

Admen Hear Commendation By Roosevelt

President Lauds Campaign of 'Truth' Started 25 Years Ago.

By the Associated Press.

Boston, June 29.—Representatives of advertising in the United States received today a message from President Roosevelt praising their "truth-in-advertising" movement and heard one of their associates urge an "aggressive follow through" in the process of "cleaning up" advertisting.

The President's message was read to nearly 2,000 men and women at the first regular meeting of the Advertising Federation of America's thirty-second annual convention. The federation also is celebrating the silver jubilee of the "truth-in-advertising" idea, which started in Boston at a previous convention.

The group, President Roosevelt stated, has "done excellent work by dedicating itself to a campaign in behalf of truth. Yours is a noble objective."

"Effective censorship of copy must be exercised by someone," he declared. "The most effective control exercised to date—and it has been astoundingly successful—is that done by the media themselves.

"Let us encourage magazines, newspapers, radio and outdoor to be even more aggressive, but intelligently aggressive in their refusal to accept deceptive advertising copy, advertising in bad taste."

Dyke also called for a judicial, painstaking study to get the real low-down on advertising's place in the scheme of things, its social value and its economic importance.

A denial that radio has "waxed fat" at the expense of the older forms of advertising came from David Sarnoff, president of the Radio Corporation of America, who said regular users of the networks "have maintained their newspaper and magazine advertising two or three times as well as have the advertisers who did not use radio."

Duce, Wife Watch Over Ill Daughter

Tivoli, Italy, June 29 (AP).—State affairs have awaited two days and nights as Premier Mussolini and his wife attended the bedside of his youngest daughter, Anna Maria, who is feared to be suffering from an attack of infantile paralysis.

Vittorio and Bruno, Il Duce's eldest sons, were summoned also from Rome Saturday when lung complications were gravest for their sister, but the official Stefani News Agency said tonight the crisis was over.

Townsfolk prayed in churches for the health of the girl.

Fascist sources said Romano, 8-year-old son of Il Duce and his wife, also was ill, but they did not specify the nature of his sickness.

A number of parents in Rome, especially those in the foreign colony, were taking their children from the city because of rumors of an epidemic.

Vote of Confidence Accorded Baldwin

London, June 29 (AP).—Prime Minister Stanley Baldwin's government was assailed as "a danger to our country and the peace and security of the world," tonight, but it won a vote of confidence in House of Commons debate.

After the premier and his war minister, Alfred Duff Cooper, were subjected to a tongue-lashing by labor leaders, a technical labor motion for adjournment of the debate based on Duff Cooper's speech recently in Paris, was rejected, 284 to 136, in the balloting, which in effect was a vote of confidence.

The debate was called to discuss declarations made by cabinet ministers outside Parliament which the labor faction contended were in conflict with Britain's declared policies.

New Deal Aids To Negro Cited By Ickes in Talk

Administration Policy Is Designed Especially to Help Race, He Says.

By the Associated Press.

Baltimore, June 29.—Harold L. Ickes, Secretary of the Interior, tonight said the New Deal conception of democracy world help the Negro "because he preeminently belongs to the class that the new democracy is designed especially to aid."

In a speech before the annual conference of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, Ickes recounted what the New Deal had done for Negroes and told what it intended to do.

"If we except the Indians, of the many groups which have been exploited," Ickes said, "Negroes perhaps have been the greatest sufferers. They were the most ignorant, the most helpless and the most docile."

At the same time, he warned the race not to become bitter over its past wrongs.

"Hatred," he said, "is a venom which poisons the blood and incapacitates the person who generates it."

President Roosevelt, Ickes asserted "has realized as no other President since Lincoln seemed to realize, that the mere existence in the Federal Constitution of the thirteenth, fourteenth and fifteenth amendments is no guarantee of their enforcement."

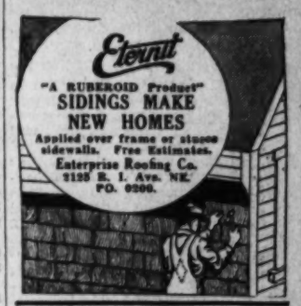

Among the acts of the President, Ickes cited the provision that relief should be given without regard to color. Also, he said, work relief jobs have been provided for both white persons and Negroes without discrimination. The farm-aid schemes have been administered equally for both races, he continued.

The Negro will benefit, Ickes went on, through the slum clearance program and rural resettlement work. The social security program will be of further benefit to Negro workers who are unable to save on their present wages, he added.

Air Corps Maps Radio Program To Cost Million

Construction, New Weather Beacons, Frequencies Changes Planned.

A $1,000,000 radio improvement program for Army air stations throughout the country, Panama and Hawaii is to be put into effect under the direction of the United States Signal Corps in the next fiscal year, it was learned yesterday.

The program, which will link the Army's 31 air fields not only into a more intimate network of military communication, but with the commercial airway system as well, will fall into three parts.

1. Setting up of simultaneous radio beacons and weather broadcasting systems at 18 fields.
2. Installation of traffic control transmitters at 20 of the busiest Army airports.
3. Replacement of existing low-frequency radio equipment at each of the Army's 31 fields with high-frequency equipment.

Buildings Already Up.

Buildings to house the new simultaneous radio beacon-weather broadcasting equipment have already been erected at Langley Field, Va.; Maxwell Field, Ala., and Patterson Field, Ohio. Bids for the equipment for all 18 stations, which is expected to cost about $400,000 are to be advertised in the next few weeks.

Successfully tested by the Bureau of Air Commerce at Pittsburgh, the simultaneous radio beacon and weather broadcasting systems permit the sending out of the weather broadcasts without interfering with the constancy of the radio beam. With the prevailing equipment, to flash weather news the station operator must break the beam, which often proves confusing to fliers near the field.

There is to be no duplication of equipment already installed by the Bureau of Air Commerce, the 18 stations having been selected by the Signal Corps to fill military gaps in the established airway system. For example, Langley Field, where the General Headquarters Air Force is stationed, is off the commercial airway system. The new beacon and weather broadcasting facilities are to be made available to commercial and private fliers.

Others Selected.

Besides the three stations at which buildings have already been constructed, the following fields have been selected tentatively: Mitchel Field, N. Y.; Pope Field at Fort Bragg, N. C.; Chanute and Scott Fields, Ill.; Selfridge Field, Mich.; Fort Riley, Kans.; Kelly, Dryden, Sloan and Hensley Fields in Texas; Fort Sill, Okla.; Hamilton and Moffatt Fields, Calif.; Albrook Field, Panama, and Hickam Field, Hawaii.

Traffic control system—the regular transmitters used by the Bureau of Air Commerce at commercial airports—are to be installed only at the busier fields. Stations selected tentatively for the installation of these transmitters, each costing roughly $500, are Mitchel, Langley, Patterson, Chanute, Scott, Selfridge, Maxwell, Kelly, Dryden, Hamilton and Moffatt Fields, Fort Leavenworth, Kans.; Barkersdale (La.) Field and March Field at San Diego, Calif.

In shifting radio equipment at all of the Army's airfields from low to high frequency, the Signal Corps plans to replace equipment, in many cases 14 years old, with more modern radio devices and to increase the tuning-in and broadcast range of these fields. Where with low frequency radio facilities the maximum range is from 50 to 150 miles, depending on the power used and weather conditions, with high frequency equipment the range is virtually unlimited. The total cost for the new radio equipment is estimated at around $500,000.

The installation of the simultaneous radio beacon and weather broadcasters is to be undertaken first, with the shift from low to high frequency radio equipment expected some time next spring.

her idol, her mother said, and mailed Gable hundreds of letters. He did not answer.

Last Wednesday Martha's father received $500 cash from his bonus bonds. He paid some bills and hid the rest, about $400, in a bureau drawer. That night he and his wife went to an American Legion ball and left Martha to take care of her six-year-old brother, Harold.

She tucked Harold in bed, kissed him good night and then whispered: "I'm going to California. Don't say anything."

Harold remembered, but he didn't say anything until the next day, not knowing that California was a long way off. He told his father, who telegraphed Martha's description to West Coast Legion posts.

Martha's chum told Mrs. Vichnes that the girl had telephoned her Wednesday night that she was at Pennsylvania station and was catching a train for Hollywood at 10:10 p. m. But she took a plane from Newark instead.

When she arrived in Los Angeles, she engaged a suite at the Hotel Roosevelt and set out to conquer Hollywood. Yesterday she wired home for carfare. Her father had no money but he telegraphed the Los Angeles Legion Post which bought Martha a train ticket East.

Yeoman Arrested On Fake Bill Count

A man who said he was Stewart Hitchener, a third class yeoman at the navy yard, was arrested in Mount Rainier last night and charged with attempting to pass a counterfeit bill.

According to authorities, Hitchener went into the pharmacy of Dr. L. H. Binkley and offered a $10 note as he made a small purchase.

Dr. Binkley summoned George Giddens, Mount Rainier policeman and lieutenant of the guard at the Treasury Department, who made the arrest and called secret service men. Hitchener was taken to Hyattsville Jail.

ment, when Mrs. Young was forcibly ejected, sustaining, she claimed, serious injuries.

Early in the day Romney said he would do everything in his power to protect Zioncheck, and keep him from being "hounded."

"I'm going to protect him and get him back to Seattle," Romney said to reporters and cameramen, who followed Zioncheck's activities.

"If they take him to Police Court or to Gallinger, it will ruin him."

Shortly before sundown yesterday Zioncheck put in a telephone call for his mother, Mrs. Frances Zioncheck, who lives at 1209 East Forty-first street, Seattle.

He learned she was seriously ill in a Seattle Hospital, but he talked to a sister at the Zioncheck residence.

Maryland State police yesterday made a futile effort to secure custody of Zioncheck. Sergt. A. L. Linard told newsmen he had asked Romney to turn the legislator over to him so that he might be taken back to the institution at Towson. He also said he had spoken to Maj. Ernest W. Brown about the matter.

"We didn't get him," was all Linard said later.

Late yesterday afternoon Zioncheck, under the friendly escort of the Capitol police, crossed the House Office Building court to the baths, where he refreshed himself with a cold shower and a shave.

At that time he wore a linen suit, and his coat collar was turned up around his ears. He walked quickly down the hall.

The few glimpses of Zioncheck, caught when his office door opened and closed yesterday, revealed that his face was badly scratched. This, it was said, was from his flight through the Maryland underbrush.

Says He Looks Sane.

Romney said Zioncheck looked "sane" to him.

"I said, 'I'm a damn sight crazier than you.'" Romney stated.

"He admitted it," the House Sergeant at arms added.

Zioncheck's trek through the woods and around Baltimore was estimated as 18 miles, the distance between Towson and where he picked up a ride.

In his dash for liberty Sunday he showed amazing agility, guards reported. He and four other patients, they said, were in the hospital yard. He leaped across a ledge and then vaulted the wall, supposedly "escape proof." The guards could not follow, and the Congressman was in the dense woods and gone before they were able to follow.

Only two weeks ago Zioncheck was removed from Gallinger after two alienists, who had examined him, failed to reach any conclusion as to his sanity. A lunacy hearing,

Democrats to Pick Florida Nominees

Jacksonville, Fla., June 29 (AP).—Florida's Democratic executive committee, its membership of 134 divided equally between men and women for the first time, will meet tomorrow to arrange for nominating successors to the late United States Senators Park Trammel and Duncan U. Fletcher.

One man and one woman committee representative were elected from each county in the June 2 primary.

Party leaders predicted the committee will call a special nominating primary for September 8 and a special run-off primary, if one is needed to give a majority vote, September 29.

Florida Republicans will pick their two Senate nominees at a meeting of the party executive committee in Orlando Wednesday. The Democratic and Republican candidates will meet in the November general election.

The Federal Diary

By Betty Read.

Andrew W. Cruse, chief of the electrical division of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce collects what his staff calls "playtoys," which he likes to display and tell the stories of their scientific value and their commercial possibilities.

Just at present the favorite exhibit is a gravity-defying piece of metal that stands on his desk and challenges anyone to make it behave as ordinary metals would. It simply floats in the air when it ought to lie flat and show none of the odd characteristics that have brought a lot of curious Government employes into his office to see the wonder-piece.

Cruse's interest, outside of his enjoyment at the bewilderment of the spectator, is that here is the first step toward repealing the law of gravity. The exhibit is made up of two pieces of magnetized metal. One is bolted onto a small block of wood, the other hangs over it, its ends stuck through the screw ends with holes too large to keep it suspended by that means. Perhaps those loose guides are merely to keep the metal from floating all around the room, but it is impossible to make the two pieces of metal touch.

"This is a new alloy-alnico," Cruse said, "and the law of gravity is repelled in it by the use of magnetics. Both pieces of metals have four north poles in the corners and the south pole in the center. That is why it is impossible to make them meet.

Possibilities Tremendous.

"This is the first metal which has lent itself to this kind of magnetization and its possibilities are tremendous. Just at present no one can say just what they are."

Television, which Cruse predicts will be a household by-word in four years, is another of his interests and his "playtoy" on it is a piece of the cable which will be used in the experiment between New York and Philadelphia. To illustrate the principle used in television he turned on one of the numerous radios in his office and then began twisting dials on an odd-looking machine in the corner of the room which recorded the sound with a zig-zag green line of great brilliance across an opaque bit of glass. With a magnet he interrupted the normal function of the emerald streak and made it dance all over the glass.

"The Government is interested in all new electrical developments of this kind," Cruse said, "and it is my job to keep radio companies and other electrical manufacturing concerns informed about what is going on abroad.

"Our point of view is to be of service to industry."

Because of engineering feats necessary to the development of television, Cruse said he did not think it would ever come within the price range of the present small radio, but ought to go on the market at about $250.

"The companies dealing with new electrical developments are putting on so much steam in research these days," he said, "that they do not have time to write papers and thus spread the information they are accumulating, so we try to do that job."

Another new development on which the Government is keeping tabs is air-conditioning, and Cruse said that he recently included an article on air-conditioning beds in a monthly journel he edits only for the bureau's representatives abroad.

See Cool Night's Sleep.

"The response was tremendous from our own people stationed in tropical countries," he said, with a laugh. "They saw the chance of a cool night's sleep."

Another device he displayed was a portable electric fan which he picked up in Germany last year. It is about the size of a small flashlight and at the press of a button its two wings unfurl and throw a miniature breeze. It sells for about $1 in Germany, and Cruse said the movie-goer is addicted to it. With true German thoroughness, the cap pulls off and inside is a space for milady to put a drop or two of perfume so that the breeze may be doubly refreshing.

His desk is lighted by a new type of lamp and he carries to various corners of his office a sight-meter to tell whether the illumination is correct for reading large print, small type or merely for sitting and admiring the pictures on his walls.

One of the degrees of light it marks is the correctness of the lighting for sewing.

"I can take to knitting now and be sure not to ruin my eyes," he said.

Cruse, a graduate of the Carnegie School of Technology, in Pittsburgh, his native city, entered the Navy after several years of study at Annapolis and served there for two years before going into electrical laboratories of private industry. He came to the Government service two years ago.

HAPPY RELIEF FROM PAINFUL BACKACHE

Caused by Tired Kidneys

Many of those gnawing, nagging, painful backaches people blame on colds or strains are often caused by tired kidneys—and may be relieved when treated in the right way.

The kidneys are one of Nature's chief ways of taking acids and wastes out of the blood. A healthy person should pass about 3 pints a day and so get rid of more than 3 pounds of waste matter.

If the 15 miles of kidney tubes and filters don't work well, waste stays in the body and may become poisonous. It may start nagging backaches, leg pains, loss of pep and energy, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes, headaches and dizziness. Don't let it lay you up.

Ask your druggist for Doan's Pills—used successfully by millions for over 40 years. They give happy relief and will help to flush out the 15 miles of kidney tubes. Get Doan's Pills.

The only gin made by the C.C. process

WE WAIT FOR A SIGNAL from the laboratory—where each gin formula is tested by a complete trial run in a miniature "pilot" still—before we proceed with the distilling. The test run insures the flavor being absolutely right.

EVER SEE SUCH BALANCE?

Perfectly balanced gin flavor is insured by Hiram Walker's exclusive Controlled Condensation process—during which nearly a dozen different flavor ingredients are distilled together. Constant scientific check-up keeps each flavor under control.

UNCHANGING AS THE SPHINX

Gin ingredients vary in flavor strength from month to month, according to soil and sunlight. Hiram Walker's Controlled Condensation process measures and compensates for such variations in each distillation formula. That's why Hiram Walker Gin always tastes the same.

FROM THE LAND OF CHOPSTICKS and from four continents Hiram Walker gathers gin ingredients. Hiram Walker makes it a point to distill its gin from the actual fruits, herbs and berries—together with 100% grain spirits.

A GREAT DIFFERENCE, YES—but no greater than the difference between old-fashioned and modern methods of distilling—and between various brands of gin. You can taste the finer flavor in Hiram Walker's Gin, the only gin distilled by the Controlled Condensation process.

Italy Promises Not to Create Ethiopia Army

Delivers Pledge to League; Selassie Will Make His Plea Today.

By the Associated Press.

Geneva, June 29.—Italy, seeking to calm fears of Great Britain and France, promised the League of Nations tonight she would not create a native Ethiopian army.

This pledge was contained in a note delivered on the eve of a session of the League Assembly before which Emperor Haile Selassie will make a personal plea for "justice."

The Italian note blamed Ethiopians for the war and sketched plans for the development of the country, promising to keep the League in touch. It announced Italy's intention to "collaborate in every way" with the Geneva body.

Haile Selassie wrote officials: "It is our intention personally to take part in one or several meetings of the Assembly at the head of the Ethiopian deleagtion."

Negus In Seclusion.

The Negus, stripped of his empire by Italy, remained in seclusion in his hotel today working on his appeal, to be delivered in French.

Creation of an "international college of elder statesmen" to help the League keep world peace was suggested tonight by the Greek jurist, Nicolas Politis.

Behind Politis' proposal was the idea that the United States, Germany and Japan might join the League if members were freed of general sanctions responsibility.

Politics proposed to limit participation of nations in economic and financial sanctions to those directly interested in any conflict and to restrict military sanctions to a regional group of states of which the victim of aggression would be a member.

He also proposed a new interpretation of Article 10, whereby nations would respect, but not undertake to guarantee, the territorial independence of other nations.

Would Advise Council.

The suggested college of statesmen would advise the council on the best means of maintaining peace during any menace of war.

Delegates were agreed the Assembly would lift sanctions from Italy, but a perplexing problem was the question of recognition of the territory acquired by force.

It was believed some action at least implying disapproval of Italy's action was discussed by the Argentine, French and British representatives.

Both Great Britain and France have openly favored removal of sanctions, although the British government announced it would not propose recognition of Italy's new empire.

Action on the Locarno problem caused by Reichsfuehrer Hitler's denunciation of that treaty will be delayed until Hitler answers a British questionnaire on his foreign policy.

Cantonese Bombed By Nanking Fliers

Hongkong, June 29 (AP).—Airmen of the Chinese central government showered bombs upon Kwangsi provincial troops today, said reports from Nanking.

Trenches held by Kwangtung Province troops also were bombed in another action, the dispatches added.

(Kwangtung and Kwangsi provinces make up the southwest Canton regime, which has been threatening civil war upon the central government at Nanking.)

They included Dr. Chang Pao-Heng, of the English department of Sun Yet Sen University.

Mrs. Durant Wins Divorce on Cruelty

Reno, Nev., June 29 (AP).—Mrs. Adelaide Bevoort Durant, wealthy and prominent New York society leader, won an uncontested divorce here today from Thomas Wells Durant at a private hearing on grounds of cruelty.

Mrs. Durant, the daughter of Mrs. Marjorie Post Close Hutton Davies, of Washington, married Durant January 19, 1926 in New York City.

They have an eight-year-old daughter, Marjorie. It was understood Mrs. Durant was given custody of the child in a sealed agreement approved by the court. It was signed November 4, 1935.

4 Jews, 3 Britons Wounded by Arabs

Jerusalem, June 29 (By the Jewish Telegraphic Agency).—Four Jews and three British constables were wounded today as Arabs continued their campaign against Jews and government forces.

The disorders, now in their eleventh week, have cost the lives of more than 140 persons, according to unofficial estimates, including 41 Jews and 90 Arabs.

The constables were wounded during an Arab mob attack on the police station at Beisan. One of them was reported in a serious condition. Collective punishment of $1,500 was immediately imposed on the Arab town for the attack.

Arabs ambushed a bus caravan en route to colonies in the Tel Aviv district and wounded two Jewish drivers. Shalom Bronstein, volunteer watchman, was wounded during an attack on the Jewish colony of Zichron Yacob and a fourth Jew was shot during a fierce midnight attack by Arabs on the co-operative settlement of Mesilah. Troops repelled the attackers with machine guns.

Union Defends Student Ousted By Columbia U.

Assails Dismissal After Nazi Protest; Threatens U. S. Campaign.

By the Associated Press.

New York, June 29.—The American Student Union today threatened a "Nation-wide" campaign for the reinstatement in Columbia University of Robert Burke, junior class president-elect, who has been told not to come back in the fall.

The college and the union were in sharp disagreement as to just why Burke was dismissed, although both agreed the action came after the student's participation in a demonstration in front of the home of Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler, Columbia's president.

Dean Herbert E. Hawkes, of Columbia College, said the students had a right to conduct the demonstration—which was in protest against sending a delegate to a Heidelberg University celebration. But the demonstration itself, he said, was of a "disgraceful" character.

"Tragic Coincidence."

The union, on the contrary, said Burke was disciplined because of his activities in that body.

It was a "tragic coincidence," the union added, that "the dismissal of Burke is being defended by Columbia University in the same week that its representative joins in the Nazi festivities at Heidelberg."

An "emergency meeting" of students to plan for Burke's defense was called for tonight, preliminary to the Nation-wide campaign projected for the fall.

The union said Dr. Butler had entrusted "the unpleasant work of reaction to subordinates while he circles the globe paying lip-service to freedom."

Fascist Methods.

From his home in Youngstown, Ohio, Burke said his disbarment was caused by efforts of Butler to "silence" the students.

"His (Butler's) means of enforcing his will smacks too much of the methods of fascism which he so loudly decries," said the student.

Meanwhile, Heidelberg dispatches said Dean Lindsey Blayney, of Carleton College, Northfield, Minn., one of the American delegates to that university's anniversary celebration had refrained today from giving the Nazi salute.

Firm Head Slain; Watchman Is Held

Cleveland, June 29 (AP).—George A. Rutherford, president of the Lincoln Storage Co., was killed and Lloyd Paese, general superintendent, was seriously wounded in a shooting affray in the company offices late today.

Police held tonight Albert R. Zautner, night watchman for the company. Detective H. G. Weltzel said formal charges in connection with the shooting would be placed against him tomorrow.

Other employes told police that Zautner appeared intoxicated when he reported at the office late today. He was ordered out. He left quietly, but returned shortly afterward.

Their report to police said he took a pistol from a desk drawer and brandished it at Rutherford and Pease. Rutherford lunged at him. He was shot down. Pease seized the pistol. He was wounded in the groin.

Other employes then closed in upon Zautner and overpowered him, they said. They held him until police arrived.

Veterans Hail Archduke Otto As 'Our Kaiser'

Fey, Ex-Chief of Heimwehr, Pledges Loyalty in Vienna Speech.

By the Associated Press.

Vienna, June 29.—The tide of Austrian monarchist sentiment and propaganda reached new heights tonight following an open declaration of loyalty to Archduke Otto by Maj. Emil Fey, former vice-chancellor and ousted head of the Vienna Heimwehr.

Fey referred to the Hapsburg pretender as the "Kaiser of Austria," in a speech before the veterans' association of the historic Vienna Deutschmeister regiment.

Legimitists expressed pleasure at the declaration which they said was unexpected. They regarded it as meaning the Heimwehr as well as the army will aid the monarchists' move to restore Otto.

"As we were loyal to Franz Josef and Karl, now we are loyal to Otto," Fey declared.

Fey holds the esteem of one faction of the Heimwehr (Home Guard) which is lukewarm toward Prince Ernst von Starhemberg who removed Fey from leadership of the Vienna branch of the organization.

The meeting's chairman was cheered enthusiastically when he said of Otto:

"We long for your physical presence just as you live in the hearts of Austrians."

The archduke sent a message to the veterans in which he said he accepted with joy all petitions by soldiers that he be their honorary patron.

"As the old Austrian army was mobilized for defense, so I hope the new army will be active only to repel aggressors."

Observers in some quarters immediately interpreted that phrase as an admonition to the Little Entente—Rumania, Yugoslavia and Czechoslovakia—opposed to Otto's restoration.

$3,686,363 Estate Is Left by Beale

Truxtun Beale, former high ranking diplomat in the State Department and a noted world traveler, left an estate valued at $3,686,363, according to petition for probate of his will filed in the District Court yesterday.

Mr. Beale, who died on June 2, at his country home at Annapolis, Md., named his wife, Mrs. Marie Oge Beale, as the principal beneficiary, although the will suggested she leave a substantial amount of money to either Garfield or Emergency Hospital. The donation is optional with Mrs. Beale, who is empowered to use her discretion as to which institution is to get the money, and also the amount to be given.

The estate is made up of more than $3,000,000 in cash, stocks, bonds and other securities. The real estate includes the famous Decatur House, at 28 Jackson place northwest, which is assessed at $497,840, and real estate in Maryland and California. Attorney William E. Schooley represented Mrs. Beale, who was named executrix of the estate.

Phoenix, Ariz., June 29 (AP).—The State Supreme Court ruled today that Arizona newspapers must pay a 1 per cent sales tax on their gross incomes under the excise-tax law enacted a year ago. The Drag-Net Method.

There was a line-up of half a hundred hoodlums at the local police headquarters last night. They represented the haul from a sudden round-up conducted by detectives who are working to reduce the number of holdups and strong-arm robberies recently reported here. From among them, it was hoped that some assailants might be picked out.

To this end, holdup victims were requested by the police to be present to scrutinize the suspects. On similar occasions in the past, victims have shown a discouraging unwillingness to co-operate in such inspections. Yet without assistance in identification, the police are practically powerless to move against the blackjack type of crime.

To conduct a round-up, the police depend on their authority to arrest "on suspicion" and to hold "for a reasonable length of time," i. e., time enough to allow confirmation of identifications. Arbitrary as this seems, it is said to have demonstrated its efficacy as the most simple means of combating petty crime.

The very fact that this is a discretionary power, however, places a double responsibility on police officers to make certain that it is always applied with discretion. Abuse of their authority in arresting on suspicion could quickly create a serious situation. At best the drag-net method is a poor substitute for the efficient detection and arrest which an adequately staffed police department should be expected to provide.

Stick To The Boat!

The tragic drowning of Jack Hayes Ridlebaugh on Sunday afternoon emphasizes two facts recently pointed out by Commodore W. E. Longfellow, water-safety expert of the American Red Cross, and commented on in these columns last month. The first: that this is the time when many of us feel an urge to take to the water. The second, and more important: that we should stick to our craft if it overturns.

Ridlebaugh and Stuart B. Wright were foolishly paddling in a very dangerous part of the Potomac, above Chain Bridge. But even in a strong current, an ordinary canoe can be filled with water and still hold up four persons. It is natural for any swimmer to think that he can reach shore quicker alone, unencumbered by the overturned craft. But Sunday's accident again revealed the importance of sticking to the boat.

The Potomac is cool and accessible. Those taking advantage of its charm should guard particularly against the sort of casualty which took Ridlebaugh's life while his companion "clung to the canoe and made his way to shore safely." It is a simple rule, but the annual toll of lives shows how little it is heeded.

A Gallon The Limit.

"Effective immediately," reads a Treasury notice just issued to customs inspectors, "the $100 exemption of paragraph 1798 of the tariff act may not be applied to distilled spirits, wines and malt liquors aggregating more than one wine gallon per resident." In view of the high customs duties upon imported liquors, the exemption has undoubtedly meant a considerable loss of revenue to the Government, and has deprived importers of some business. Domestic liquor dealers have also protested that it encourages the purchase and importation of low priced liquor for subsequent illicit sale at prices far below those that they must charge to make any profit.

Removal of the exemption privilege, following passage of the liquor tax administration act, puts an end to the anomalous situation created by a ruling of the United States Customs Court holding that the Treasury had no legal right to extend to liquor imports the maximum exemption allowed under the tariff act of 1930. The sole ground for objection to the present order is found not in its substance but in the manner in which it has been issued to take effect immediately. Travelers entering the country laden with assorted spirits will be called upon unexpectedly to pay heavy duties upon imported liquor, or else forced to toss their purchases overboard.

It has often been said that the method of administering our customs laws creates more bad feeling than the actual demands for payment, excessively high though tariffs sometimes are. The present incident is an outstanding example of the kind of inconsiderate treatment that creates a sense of injury—a feeling that the Government enjoys springing painful and expensive surprises on hapless tourists. Provision should have been made in the liquor tax administration act for a waiting period to give travelers sufficient warning of impending changes in policy and save them from needless expense and disappointment. In the long run, the Government would benefit by dealing generously with its citizens, thus enlisting their co-operation in enforcement of just claims instead of arousing the resentful spirit that encourages tax evasion.

"From Any Source."

The steel industry has taken official cognizance of the activities of John L. Lewis' Committee for Industrial Organization by announcing through the Iron and Steel Institute that it intends to "oppose any attempt to compel its employes to join a union or to pay tribute for the right to work." At the same time the members of the institute affirm their belief in the principles of collective bargaining and pledge their aid in maintaining it without "interference from any source."

Unfortunately the very wording of this statement tends to cast doubt on the reality of the freedom enjoyed by the steel industry's company unions. Moreover, the fact that the Iron and Steel Institute, representing about 95 per cent of the industry, is spokesman for the employers itself constitutes a warning to labor of a distinctly formidable character. If the steel industry means literally that it will protect its workers against coercion from any source, it should itself maintain a severely detached attitude toward all kinds of organization efforts. The assumption that workers who join outside unions must be helpless victims of pressure tactics is decidedly open to challenge.

Individual steel concerns could easily take steps to protect their employes against unscrupulous agitators without resorting to manifestoes pledging an open-shop policy for the industry. Indeed, the tone and substance of the institute's announcement creates a grave suspicion that the industry favors only one kind of collective bargaining—that made possible by the company union under close managerial supervision. Such suspicions are strengthened by the knowledge that the industry no longer feels bound by the restrictive provisions of the Wagner act, since the recent Federal court decision denying the right of the National Labor Relations Board to order the reinstatement of certain workers allegedly dismissed for union activities.

If the workers are as emancipated as the companies maintain, and as satisfied with the status of their unions, they will themselves resist the efforts of professional labor organizers to detach them from their present allegiance. On the other hand, if they fall an easy prey to the persuasive arguments of the followers of Mr. Lewis, it will clearly indicate that they prefer another type of collective bargaining agency. In either case, it is ridiculous to defend interference on the part of management on the ground that the workers' liberty of choice is threatened.

The issue is no longer whether the steel industry shall be unionized, but only how it shall be unionized. The workers are already organized in company unions that could easily be brought together to form a comprehensive type of industrial union admirably adapted to the purposes of collective bargaining. Labor, however, may well pause to consider whether it would not be better to await an opportunity for a peaceful transition from the company union to the fully emancipated industrial union instead of forcing the issue now, inviting a violent conflict and possible defeat.

The danger is equally great for the companies. They are already the targets of Government attack for alleged violations of the anti-trust laws. Moreover, the echoes of the President's acceptance speech denouncing economic royalists has hardly died down before this ill-judged manifesto is issued by the Iron and Steel Institute. Under the circumstances, it seems exceedingly shortsighted for the steel industry to launch a campaign to suppress independent organization activities among its 500,000 employes.

The mere fact that a Federally-enforced and supervised system of collective bargaining will cease to exist in the highly probable event of the Wagner act being declared unconstitutional must not be taken as a mandate to defy the trend toward a system of organization permitting labor to bargain collectively through representatives of its own choosing.

If emancipation from the restrictions of bureaucratic control is regarded as a signal for breaking up any sort of union unacceptable to employers, demands for a return to Government supervision will become increasingly and irresistibly insistent. It cannot be stated too emphatically that the benefits of a voluntary system of collective bargaining adapted to the rapidly changing and varied needs of different industries can only be obtained in the absence of coercion by either capital or labor.

Industrial conflict would not lead to any final solution of the problems that confront the steel industry. It could and would, however, as the institute statement itself predicts, "endanger the welfare of the country." That admission alone reveals the impossibility of a feudal attitude on the part of the Iron and Steel Institute.

At Geneva.

The Assembly of the League of Nations convenes in special session at Geneva today, under peculiarly disheartening circumstances.

Eight months ago the nations forming part of the League had reason to believe that, after wandering for years in the desert, they, like Moses at Mount Pisgah, were at last in sight of the promised land. For the first time in history action had been taken to impose financial and economic sanctions against a great power that had committed an act of wanton aggression against a co-signatory of the Covenant. This action, although involving real sacrifices, was being effectively carried out by all but a few of the League's members.

There can be no denying the fact that this development constituted a milestone of vast importance in the history of collective efforts for peace. Had the measures taken succeeded in their object; had Italy been forced to make peace with Ethiopia on a basis generally compatible with the League Covenant, the League would today be regarded as what it was originally designed to be: the essential bulwark of world peace.

But now, as the Assembly meets, there hangs over it the shadow of Italy's victory in East Africa. In the face of this development Great Britain and other nations have indicated their anxiety to abandon sanctions. This decision the Assembly is called upon to ratify and no twists of phraseology will disguise the fact that in so doing the League will be held up as incapable of preventing the subjection of a small, weak nation by one which is powerful and unscrupulous.

From one point of view, therefore, the League can be regarded as an organization which can call on its members to make costly sacrifices but which cannot guarantee them any substantial benefits. This, apparently, is the point of view of Guatemala, Honduras and Nicaragua, all of whom have now signified their intentions of resigning from Geneva. And while these nations are not in themselves important, their resignation cannot be dismissed as of no account. For the tendency represented by their action may spread.

But it would be short-sighted indeed to argue from the League's present weakness, or from the departure of the Central American states, that the League structure is necessarily crumbling. Even in its weakness, it is clear, it continues to command important support and to serve as the only rallying point of those nations anxious to preserve peace.

This is seen in the sentiment shown regarding the action that should be taken in consequence of the abandonment of sanctions. Some League statesmen argue that there must be a clean sweep of the whole Italo-Ethiopian mess by recognizing Italy's conquest as an unwelcome but inescapable fact and then proceeding to reform the League Covenant to bring it in line with existing realities. These ideas, however, are meeting with stout resistance.

The great majority of nations represented in the Assembly apparently feel that the League can under no circumstance recognize gains made through force. And they are also of the opinion that there is nothing inherently wrong with the Covenant; that it is an instrument which can be effective whenever the nations of the world wish to make it so.

Can the League be strengthened and will the nations composing its membership agree to strengthen it? That rather than the action to be taken regarding Italy's claim to Ethiopia and the demand for the reform of the Covenant is the great problem facing the Assembly. And what is done about it, it is safe to say, will go far to determine the future not only of the League but of world peace as well.

The Passing Of Privacy.

There is something more than humor in the news that Secretary Perkins was forced to flee to a hotel service elevator for an uninterrupted conference with an assistant. There is a grim expression of one of the worst evils of the modern era.

Time was when privacy flourished as the perquisite of power: the higher the personage, the greater his opportunities for solitude. Time followed when popular rights extended to a point where privacy became a sacred part of every citizen's individual liberty: the right to be alone—or as much alone as you chose to be—was believed inalienable. But now the klieg lights spare nobody, high or low—when, though there may not be a dictaphone in your inner office, there is sure to be a radio in your hired taxi, and when television is just around the corner.

We can well sympathize with the Secretary of Labor's desire for privacy and admire her ingenuity in getting away even for a while, from the importunities of fellow delegates and the clamor of the telephone. But why did she expect to find privacy in a Philadelphia hotel in the first place?

"A sleight-of-hand artist can fool adults much easier than children," says a magician. That's because the longer you stumble around in this mundane muddle the more inclined you are to believe that whatever can't happen usually does.

The more we try to follow politicians the more admiration we have for the high order of intelligence possessed by the Mad Hatter.

A North Carolinian View.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The letter of Mr. John B. Duncan illustrates the two types of mind which are prevalent in this country. Senator Ed. Smith is an illustration of another generation, those who grew up in an atmosphere of resistance to carpetbaggerism, fool Yankee-Protestantism.

Mr. Duncan is a representative of that group of persons who have entered the South for their own economic advancement and out of his own predilections judged the South faulty in all things.

The Duncan type of mind is illustrated further by members of the faculties of two universities, Chicago and Dartmouth.

Recently one member of the faculty of the University of Chicago stated that the South, with only one-fourth of the population, had one-half of the school children of the Nation and that soon these would be entering other localities with their (Saxon-Scotch) philosophy and that the Republican Party would have to do something about it. The president of Dartmouth, exhibiting an intellectual cowardice, refused to tell the members of his graduating class to battle the authoritarians and super-materialists for the retaking of Massachusetts Colony; but he did tell them to go South for their opportunities. But, he did realize the truth

There are no opportunities in New England for Yankees. The Saxon-Scotch still control the South and those that enter there must accept their philosophy. For Yankees to invade the South and then bite the hand which has fed them is understandable only if you realize how far the Yankee has sunk, for he is a creature without a worthwhile philosophy and without the slightest sense of social responsibility, unless same can be turned to an economic profit.

Thus they failed to teach the Negro their industries and ousted him, segregated him on the Southern reservation as they had placed the Indian upon reservations. If the Yankee had given the Negro an opportunity, they would still control their industries and their States: and their future generations would have opportunities, instead of being evacuated. Now they are running all over the West and South, in agricultural regions, shouting "Sanctuary, sanctuary, give the poor Yankee a job," and immediately after having obtained succor, they out of their predilections, commence to write atrocity stories against the Negro or against the Saxon-Scotch people of the South.

Why should the South receive Yankees, except to laugh at them for the cowardice shown in refusal to retake Massachusetts Colony? I am a North Carolinian, the best governed State in the world.

Youth Awakens.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: As our body politic moves forward into the coming campaign and the populace rings with enthusiasm from the rhetorical splendor which will emanate from the various political orators, a new movement of special significance seems to shape the horizon of national politics. This new movement is the movement of youth and today more than any time in history is dictating the policies and principles of parties, not only in America, but likewise throughout the world. We find this activity of young people in practically every modern democratic state, as well as in the monarchial governments of the Eastern Hemisphere.

The youth of today in the colleges and State universities are becoming interested in subjects pertaining to the workings of governments, subjects such as sociology, political science, economics, constitutional law, philosophy, and the various other social sciences. Youth is demanding a say in such procedures, realizing that some day it will be responsible for the burdens left by the present generation. The young people know that in case of international conflict they are the ones who will have to shoulder such, not only physically at the present, but morally and socially in the years to come. Twenty years ago youth sallied forth with the bayonet and a war cry; today youth steps forward with a diploma and the demand for peace.

Counsel For Aristotle.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Last week, one who calls himself Aristotle, bewailed our present social political condition. He was shocked by the great "show" the Democratic Party threw at Philadelphia. He wanted to know why the American people cannot elect a third party candidate. I wonder who this Aristotle is. I admire his or her simplicity. But has Aristotle ever studied history? Does Aristotle not know that there have always been enslaved illiterate, exploited masses of humanity? Why cannot a man who will bring about an intelligent and balanced social system be elected? The answer is—Ignorance.

Democratic elections are not governed by knowledge and intelligence, but by money. As long as 600 families control wealth and opportunity and 32,000,000 Americans are without grammar school education and 64,000,000 are without high school education, slavery will prevail and democracy is going to be a travesty.

We can go further than that: Whenever any person says that he is following any Christian religion; or, if a Jew, he says he is following the religion of the Jews; or if he follow the philosophy of Confucius, he cannot say that he thinks his religion is sound unless he is willing to follow the principles to share the wealth of the land. If a man declare himself to be an American, he must profess share-the-wealth principles.

Looking about us and seeing that poverty, ignorance and misery abound on all sides, we must conclude that the people of this country are neither Christian, nor Jewish, nor American.

A New Party?

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Franklin Delano Roosevelt has accepted the nomination of his party. But what party nominated him? Most of the nominators were officeholders—New Dealers. The Democrats had either walked out of the convention hall or had refused to sit in on the committee who wrote (?) the platform. It is generally understood the platform was written in the White House several days before the convention meeting.

Anyway, in accepting the nomination Mr. Roosevelt did not mention the Democratic Party in any connection. In his salutation he did say "Democratic" convention. And in one place he said "a democracy of opportunity." But the party as such—the Democratic Party—the party Jefferson established, Jackson gave his life to, Cleveland made dominant in his day, and the party that Wilson brought to its zenith, Candidate Roosevelt completely ignored in his acceptance speech. Was this failure to mention the party by name a slip of the tongue, an oversight or a deliberate notification to the country that his party is not the Democratic Party, but a new party wholly, completely, everlastingly, a Roosevelt party?

There is a tinge of reality in the assumption that the phraseology of his acceptance was deliberate—and no doubt, justified. Justified since most all of the old leaders of the Democratic Party were absent from the convention of New Dealers.

Transit Fare Proposal.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: With the thought that it might be of some assistance, I have written a letter to Mr. William A. Roberts, people's counsel, as he seems the best bet for the protection of the people's rights. A few extracts follow:

I have lived in Washington since August, 1910, and am unable to recall anything the Public Utilities Commission has ever done for the good of the public in connection with its so-called regulation and control of the street transportation companies.

It will be recalled, and the records will show, that the WRECO was always pleading poverty, and clamoring for increased fares at regular intervals; and, applying the now well-established but none the less damnable principle that the public must be mulcted in sufficient sums to guarantee a "fair return" on investments, including watered stocks and padded inventories, regardless of the service rendered in return for such sums, the commission quite regularly granted the requests for increased fares.

This procedure was carried to the point where, on one occasion, when the WRECO petitioned for an additional increase in fares and revenues, the commission rejoined that it would not act in the absence of a similar request by the Capital Traction Co., and, of all things, the latter replied that it did not need an increase in fares. And yet, as the record will further show, the Capital Traction Co. was forced in as a party before the commission, and the commission thrust an unrequested, unwanted, and unsought increase of fares upon that company.

The ncame the widely heralded remedy—the consolidation. That momentous event was followed promptly with the voluntary adoption of the pass-system, at prices voluntarily fixed by and acceptable to the company. It seems now, however, that sufficient time has elapsed to produce in the minds of the company's managers the thought that the public should be further asked to pay, and pay and pay; and so, with the apparent idea that the public must have forgotten its treatment of the past, you are confronted with a request for increased fares, the abandonment of the pass-system, and the like.

But certainly neither you nor the public have forgotten, and surely neither can forget, the dilapidated, antiquated, unsafe, and out-of-date cars and the service (?) given the public in the past and at present. The enumeration of instances illustrating the public-be-damned attitude would serve no useful purpose, as that attitude is too well known by everybody.

If street car and bus service can be operated successfully in New York and hundreds of other places at a 5-cent fare, what is the matter with the operation of such services in Washington? To contend that a few car reroutings, and improvements (usually not made) can form the basis of an excuse for fare increases, then they merit careful scrutiny and proper comment.

Radio Pronunciations.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Some pronunciations heard over the radio in the Democratic convention broadcast of nominating speeches: "boodget" for budget by Senator Connally. "Realty" for reality by Mrs. Mack. "Routine" pronounced with the "ou" as in sour by Gov. Lehman. "Paper mash" for papier mache by an N. B. C. announcer. Humantarian for humanitarian by half a dozen speakers.

But the crowning error was the statement of an announcer in his account of the convention that the band had played "Marching Through Georgia!" That is the song celebrating Sherman's march to the sea which makes every Southerner's blood boil.

The Post Impressionist

Vacation Curses.

Post Office, Tuesday.

THERE are certain thoughts about returns from vacations which have been persistently sizzling in this columnist's so-called brainpan ever since his own return from vacation last week.

And that's a long time for any mundane thought to linger in our particular brainpan.

We think:

That the man who says "I certainly am glad to get back to work" is a liar;

That the people who have remained in the office found genuine delight in forwarding all bills and all letters bearing two-cent stamps—so that we might have the privilege of paying "postage due."

And we know that the remaining Mount Rainier of correspondence which towered above our little desk as we, at last, came in—wondering why nobody would say "How tanned you are!"—we know that these 14,408 feet are, alone, enough to discourage the hero of "Excelsior."

* * *

Until today, we have just sat and glared at the lower rim of the snow-cap.

But we've got to begin shoveling sometime. So we might do a bit here and now.

Dear Post-Impressionist:

I am a young lady in my mid-thirties—or very early forties, anyhow—and only recently married. That's how it happens I am still rather unfamiliar with masculine nomenclature.

My husband began by always being home evenings, or always taking me along when he wasn't. He wouldn't think of going to a party anywhere if I wasn't invited. Now, however, he has begun to—not only think about it, I mean, but actually going, and pretty frequently at that. When I ask him why, he says these parties he goes to are "stag-parties," meaning parties which don't have any ladies invited to them—as if that was an excuse!

I would appreciate some information from you as to the origin and customs of stag-parties, so I can argue with him knowledgeably. I have inquired from Miss Haworth; but she hasn't answered; yet, and I don't know if she doesn't know or just doesn't want to answer.

Yours hopefully, ANXIOUS.

Dear Anxious:

As a man and a brother, I am not permitted to tell you all that goes on at stag-parties. Moreover, their origins are lost in the morningmists of history.

But the origin of their present name—with its faint indication of the great purpose of these affairs—is a trifle less antique. It will be found in the opening line of "The Lady"—yes, oddly enough, a lady—"Of the Lake," by the late Sir W. Scott, to wit:

THE POST-IMPRESSIONIST.

Now he writes:

Dear Post-Impressionist: Apropos your pre-vacation remarks on French as spoken upon the stage—have you ever listened to the funny French used by the average singer? Even your Grace Moores and Nelson Eddys have difficulties with their pronunciation—although all the French, German and Italian notes of John Charles Thomas ring, in every sense, true. The hardest task for Americans and Englishmen is that provided by the final syllable in such words as laissez and those with a terminal accented "e". They sound it as they sound the English "ay" in "day." Yours,

BOGEL.

So to Mr. Stickney—and breakfast! Says he:

Dear Post-Impressionist: There was something rather irregular about that recent reference of yours to Uruguay. There was even an astonishing indication that here existed one subject to which your erudition did not extend. I am prompted to challenge you to tell us where Uruguay is situated.

Yours truly,
SIDNEY STICKNEY.

We accept this challenge cheerfully.

"Uruguay" is situated wherever it is used. But it is rarely used. Irregular? Of course it is irregular! It is part of one of the most irregular verbs in the English language.

"To aguay" means "to be atremble"—to have, in modern terms, the jitters. Compare "ague." Old French, aguer! Latin, aguare, See Langland, Wm. (1930?-1400), Vision of Piers Ploughman:

* * *

"He felle aguaie."

* * *

Thus we have:

I'm aguay,
Thou'rt aguay,
He's aguay,
We're aguay,
Uruguay,
Paraguay.

Fair Enough

By Westbrook Pegler.

Champ Chasers.

In 15 years of sport writing your correspondent had many opportunities to study the breed of champion-chasers, a parasitic form of insect life who are attracted to success as the moth to the flame or the house fly to the sugar bowl. All champions suffer from this plague. Jack Dempsey was pestered and bitten by a large following of fair-weather pals who drank his hootch and ate his food, borrowed his money for keeps and imposed upon their intimacy with the champ to obtain prestige among other human tricks who had been unable to fasten to him. Gene Tunney, despite his austerity which repelled the lop-eared types, nevertheless was unable to escape the nuisance. He was pursued and caught up with by a more genteel variety of pest, outwardly different, but of the same general breed.

Max Schmeling, however, is the first winter in sport to discover among the cooties in the seams of his shirt a ruler of a world power.

When Schmeling last winter accepted the fight with Joe Louis, Adolf Hitler let it be distinctly understood that the prestige of the Nazi state was not at stake. Through the propaganda mill of Doktor Josef Goebbels, the Reichsfuehrer disavowed the enterprise. Schmeling had not been too successful in the ring and had brought humiliation on the race of supermen when he forgot to duck a right swing to the neck thrown by a California Jew, Max Baer. Now he was undertaking to fight a Negro and the situation was fraught with disgraceful possibilities.

* * * *

At no time during the months when Schmeling was preparing to fight Louis did the Nazi government accept any responsibility in the matter. Schmeling did not then enjoy the status of official patriot and representative of Nazi manhood. He was absolutely on his own, because there seemed an excellent chance that having already been knocked out by a Jew he would now be stretched in the resin at the feet of a cotton-field Negro.

At the time of the fight press dispatches from Germany reported that there was no betting on the fight in the Nazi state. Nobody wished to bet on the Negro against the German, but nobody wished to risk any marks, even at the attractive price of 7 to 1, on Schmeling.

But before the night was over Schmeling had become a great German patriot, and his unexpected conquest of the colored boy had been taken over as a triumph for Adolf Hitler and his government.

Hitler, himself, who had had nothing to say while doubt existed, cabled Schmeling "most cordial felicitations on your splendid victory" and sent flowers to Schmeling's wife. Goebbels now perceived in a prizefight, which had been of no significance to the Reich, a splendid patriotic achievement and cabled Schmeling "we know you fought for Germany." Not only that, but the press bureau of the Nazi regime enthusiastically embraced Schmeling as a great example of the new Youth and his winning as a victory for Hitlerissm.

* * * *

The farce of the German elections, in which it is forbidden to vote "no," was so infantile that the civilized races of the world were only amused. But the spectacle of the front-running chancellor chasing after a winner, whom he had previously disavowed, and yelling "Atta boy champ, I was with you all the time," is the cheapest display of ki-yi sportsmanship in all the history of the sport. Moreover, the mere fact that the Nazis can celebrate a prizefighter's victory as a great national triumph is a fair indication of the character of the regime. The heavyweight championship of the world has been an American monopoly for many years, barring a few brief and highly questionable intervals, but the American State has never interpreted anything that happened in the ring as a national achievement. However, other countries, unaccustomed to prestige in pugilism may be permitted a little exultation over their success if they are so bad off for accomplishments.

The conduct of Hitler, Goebbels and the Nazi government, however, in waiting to see how the fight turned out and then acclaiming their hero, inferentially, themselves, is equivalent to placing a bet on the winner after the horses have finished.

The Feuhrer, who stands as guarantor of the sportsmanship of the Nazi state in the impending Olympic games here, betrays a complete ignorance of the meaning of sport and qualifies under the sporting code as the champion mucker of the world.

U. S.-Mexican Treaty For Irrigation Is Urged

Austin, Tex., June 29 (AP).—The Texas planning board today called for prompt negotiation of a treaty between the United States and Mexico for a partition of Rio Grande waters.

In a resolution the board said an emergency exsited and a shortage of water for irrigation was imminent in the Rio Grande Valley, prolific producing area for citrus fruit and vegetables. It urged the Governor, Vice President Garner, Secretary of State Cordell Hull and the Texas delegation in Congress to exert every effort for a speedy negotiation of a treaty in accordance with a recent act.

Coroner Finds Prisoner Died of Natural Causes

A certificate of death due to natural causes was issued by Coroner A. Magruder MacDonald yesterday after an autopsy into the death of William B. Vinton, 52, an electrician.

Vinton died suddenly Sunday night in a Fourth Precinct police station cell. He had been arrested by Detective Sergt. J. J. Tolson on a houseboat on the Potomac for investigation, following a robbery.

The first American was a homeless wanderer, but a brave and intelligent man. Such is the deduction of Dr. Frank H. H. Roberts, jr., Smithsonian Instution archeologist, from shreds of evidence gathered to date on the ways of life of wraith-like figures, who probably nearly 15,000 years ago, were following the bison herds over the Western plains.

Dr. Roberts has now started his third summer of excavation in northeastern Colorado on the site of a probable hunting bivouac of the mysterious "Folsom man," maker of a curious form of spear or arrow point, the associations of which indicate that it antedates any evidence of human occupation of the New World. The most intensive sifting of the soil has failed to reveal any bone of Folsom man or any evidence of a dwelling place.

The most likely conclusion, Dr. Roberts contends, in an account of his work to date just issued by the Smithsonian Institution, is that the pioneer American was "a typical hunter depending entirely upon the bison for his maintenance and sustenance. He no doubt supplemented his preponderant meat diet with wild seeds and 'greens,' but did not cultivate his own vegetable food.

"He probably * * * traveled wherever the bison moved, in order to support himself. For that reason it is not likely that his dwelling consisted of anything more substantial than a tent made from the skins of that animal. Traces of the places where he pitched his shelter will be extremely hard to find at this late date. A hard-packed floor and hearth, perhaps some post molds, is the most that can be expected."

Remains of at least nine individual bison of an extinct species have been found at the site. The probability is, Dr. Roberts says, that Folsom man's method of hunting these creatures differed little from the practices encountered by the earliest Spanish explorers of the Southwest. There were, of course, no horses. Folsom man hunted afoot with stone-tipped spears and, possibly, bows and arrows.

It is unlikely, Dr. Roberts says, that the first American ever actually killed a bison with his spear or arrows. The best he could do was to so injure the animal that is could not keep up with the herd and might eventually drop from loss of blood. Then the pursuing hunters probably would rush in with clubs and kill it.

All this indicates that Folsom man must have had a high degree of intelligence and courage. He had the brains and fortitude to pit his feeble body against the animals and "make a living" out of it. It was not necessary for him to develop an agriculture because the bison and a few stones gave him all he needed—food, clothing, shelter, weapons, kitchen utensils, decorations.

Otherwise the first American appears to have been a normal human being. He wore ornaments. He painted his body. He was a painstaking artist in stone and bone. He had an appreciation of beauty. Sometimes he was careless at his work, took short cuts, and left his jobs unfinished.

Thus far has he emerged from the darkness of ten or fifteen millenniums.

Mormons Drive To Take 80,000 Off Relief Oct. 1

Campaign to Make Every Member Self-Supporting in Full Swing.

By the Associated Press.

Salt Lake City, June 29.—The Latter Day Saints Church, mixing religion with relief, reported progress tonight in a world-wide drive to take 80,000 members "off relief" by October 1.

The concentrated campaign to make every member self-sustaining, directed from the church's capital here, showed these results after six weeks: 212 farm, industrial, canning and sewing projects in full swing; 238 adidtional projects planned, many to start within a few weeks; 1,487 acres planted to garden crops.

To Go Without Meals.

Under the plan, as explained by Harold B. Lee, church security program director, the 750,000 members are asked to go without two meals the first Sunday of each month—giving the monetary equivalent to the relief fund. This is expected to yield about $1 a year per member.

With the "fast donations," land is being leased and equipment purchased for apportionment among the unemployed. The harvest will go into common storehouses.

Similarly managed "one for all and all for one" projects produce clothing, bedding and canned fruits and vegetables.

Extended Over World.

Although centered in Utah and southern Idaho—strongest center of church popoulation—the relief program is being extended to every part of the globe where the church's units need it, including California, where there is a rapidly growing membership; Canada and Mexico.

There's nothing new about the relief plan. Something of the sort has been in operation since the church's founding by Joseph Smith in 1830. Alarmed at the numbers on Government relief, leaders called for a revival of pioneer days' undertakings.

First Pension Checks Given to Texas Couple

Austin, Tex., June 29 (AP).—The first Texas old-age pension checks were presented today to Frank Kainer, 103-year-old farmer from Weimar, and his 95-year-old wife.

Ready for mailing tomorrow, 40,097 additional checks were ready for approved applicants over 65.

Monthly checks will range from $9 to $30, depending on the applicant's need. Orville S. Carpenter, State pension director, estimated the average would be around $18. Half of the money will be given by the State out of liquor tax revenues and the other half by the Federal Government.

Nye to Stump For Permanent Neutral Policy

By the Associated Press.

Senator Gerald P. Nye (Republican), of North Dakota, chairman of the Senate Munitions Investigating Committee, yesterday said he would campaign in 38 States this summer for a five-point permanent neutrality program he plans to introduce in the next Congress.

The program would be embodied in two bills, he said, to be introduced in both Houses early next session. Nye added it would include:

Nationalization of the arms industry.

Enlargement of the present embargo on the sales of arms to warring nations to cover petroleum products.

An embargo on both public and private loans to belligerents.

Rigid restrictions on Americans traveling in war zones.

Nye said one bill would ask a $40,000,000 appropriation to finance the establishment of a publicly owned arms industry, for the manufacture of guns, powder, gas, armor plate and warships, with other points included in a separate bill.

Nye said he also would sponsor a constitutional amendment requiring a national referendum to approve participation in any war.

The Senator added that he would "stump the country" between July and December to arouse public support.

Later, he said, he plans to introduce a bill for unifying the War and Navy departments into a single department of national defense.

The Once Over

By H. I. Phillips.

JUNE.
(With Apologies.)

Oh, what is so shrill as a day in June?
Then, if ever, come raucous days;
The networks play a painful tune
As many a man his grammar slays.
Whether we look or whether we listen,
We hear men cheer, we hear men hissin';
Every clod feels a stir of might,
An instinct to hear his own voice boom
And, using phrases dull and trite,
To yell, "I name a man than whom. . . ."

* * * *

To cry, "He is the peepul's friend—
He battles to uplift the masses. . . ."
To shout until his veins distend
And flay opponents all as asses;
To promise us the happy day,
And at all fancied evils strike;
His chief thought, "Is my voice okay,
And am I standing near a mike?"

* * * *

To shout about his country's woes—
To bleed, to die for it, to share
The humblest cot, if he but knows
His bleeding's done when on the air!
To rescue all from pains and aches,
To save all men from incomes low—
One lone provision's all he makes:
It must be done by radio!

* * * *

"Exploiters! . . . Robbers! . . . Morons! . . . Thieves!"—
The cool June air is made to smoke
With all the gases it receives
From orators who ought to choke;
"Blood money! . . . Brigands! . . . Filthy rich! . . .
"Reactionaries! . . . Despots! . . . Bums!"—
I'm thankful for a summer which Without this din and tumult comes!

* * * *

And whatever of life hath ebbed away
Comes flooding back for all to hear—
If they can stand it night and day!
The home's tuned in and balcony fills it,
We can't do a thing, for each network wills it;
No use to tune out the deadly roar—
We'll still hear the "set" of the man next door;
We may stuff our ears but we can't help knowing
Somewhere some campaign star is blowing;
The word comes hurtling through the air
That voting right restores lost hair,
That ballots cast for so-and-so
Will lift you up when feeling low;
That if you'll mark your ballot right
You'll never know a sleepless night;
That headache, halitosis, gout
Are things that you can be without
If you will just be sweet and nice
And take the microphone's advice!

* * * *

Oh, what is so shrill as a day in June?
Nothing, my friends, that I remember;
But you can have the wondrous boon—
Make mine a morning in November!

Don Marquis

By William Lyon Phelps.

Archy's Boss.

Let me recommend to all who enjoy humor and satire to read the latest book by Don Marquis, "Archy Does His Part." Its immediate predecessors were Archy's "Life of Mehitabel" and "Archy and Mehitabel." Archy is a cockroach, Mehitabel is a cat.

The situation in the whole world today, while tragic, is of such a fantastic nature that it irresistibly draws the attention of the humorist and the satirist. As the Bible predicted, many false prophets have gone out into the world. Some of our American humorists, Don Marquis, Ogden Nash, Robert Benchley, Leonard Bacon and others, find almost an embarrassing amount of subjects made to their hand.

* * * *

Don Marquis is a poet, playwright, novelist, humorist, critic, satirist and philosopher. For a number of years he was one of the best newspaper columnists in America. He has created characters through whom his observation on human nature are made—The Old Soak, Mehitabel the Cat, Archy the Cockroach, Capt. Peter Fitzurse, etc.

Like so many writers, he studied art and for over a year was at the Corcoran Art School in Washington. The training was of great value to the future satirist. For a time he went on the road with a stock theatrical company; then as a newspaper man in the South, he became acquainted with Joel Chandler Harris.

* * * *

Like many professional humorists, Mr. Marquis is a philosopher and thinker; his tragedy based on the New Testament story of the Crucifixion, which he called "The Dark Hours," was played on the metropolitan stage. It was closer to his own heart than perhaps anything else he has written, even as Eugene O'Neil meant his religious play "Days Without End" to be his masterpiece.

Finally, to return to his latest book, "Archy Does His Part," I am sure that persons of all shades of political opinion will enjoy it enormously, provided they have the saving grace of humor. It is published by Doubleday Doran Co., Garden City, N. Y.

As Citizens Gathered to Protest Transit Rate Increase

The mass meeting at the District Building last night as representatives of organized citizenry spoke against the proposal of the Capital Transit Co. that it be permitted higher rates. C. C. Marsh, president of the Rhode Island Citizens Association (standing), is speaking.

Charges Fly at Fare Hearing

Marvin McLean, president of the Brookland Citizens Association, not only criticized the tendency toward one-man cars but demanded a single weekly pass of $1, universal transfers, enforcement of more rigid sanitary regulations on street cars and buses and elimination of the overcrowded bus.

Abolition of the weekly pass would be agreebale to the Manor Park Citizens Association, Ernest H. Pullman, its president said, providing the 5-cent cash fare is substituted.

A spokesman for the Dahlgren Terrace Citizens Association called the transit system the worst in the country and proposed municipal government operation if attempts to improve the service fail, while George A. Warren, of Mid-City Citizens Association, siad the Friendship Heights line is "unspeakably bad."

Lack of Dividends.

Arthur Briscoe, who explained he merely spoke as one of 1,200 or 1,500 stockholders, raised the first discordant note at the meeting by calling attention to the investments and the lack of dividends in recent years. After some of his remarks were greeted with catcalls, he charged that the meeting was one-sided.

People's Counsel Roberts arose and stated that it was so intended to be—all pro-public.

"Don't you represent the stockholders at all?" asked Briscoe.

"No," shouted Roberts, "only the people who ride."

While Merrill was making his talk, Roberts sought to question him with such questions as:

"Do you consider the Capital Transit Co. is giving satisfactory service?"

Not Satisfactory.

Merrill at first explained that in his years of experience in public utility management he had never been satisfied with the operation. Finally, under insistence by Roberts, he said as to the Capital Transit Co.:

"No, I don't believe the service is satisfactory to anyone."

The last spokesman for the company, Edwin Jones, a trial lawyer, who said he came voluntarily and uninstructed, aroused such a storm of hostility before he had talked many minutes that he was finally forced to sit down upon request of the chairman, who pointed out that he had been given ample time to present his side of the case.

Fred Walker, of Park View Citizens Association, put the finishing touch on the arguments of the street car riders, however, just before the meeting adjourned by inquiring:

"Do the stockholders ride on their street cars "

After pointing out that they took no interest in the service some years ago, when fares were going up and service was falling, he added:

Venezuela Appoints New U. S. Minister

Caracas, Venezuela, June 29 (AP).—Dr. Diogenes Escalante, veteran Venezuelan diplomat, was appointed Minister to Washington today.

He was Minister to London from 1915 until recently, and represented Venezuela several times before the League of Nations. He is a former minister of interior and was once private secretary to President Eleazar Lopez Contreras. He founded the newspaper El Neuvo Diario in 1913.

night in two years. Maximums of 108 were touched yesterday in Dresden and Phillipsburg, Kans.

At Mount Vernon in southern Illinois, the warmest day of the year thus far, 105 degrees, was experienced. North Dakota's severely burned counties were still in the heat wave's grip.

In northeastern and eastern South Dakota, hail and severe windstorms destroyed farm buildings and crops. In eastern North Carolina, a death and thousands of dollars' damage were attributed to a series of wind and hail storms.

At St. Paul, Minn., Gov. Elmer Holt, WPA Administrator Harry Hopkins resettlement and regional WPA officials prepared for a conference today, with the specific problem the needs of the spring wheat belt. Millions of bushels already have been burned out.

However, distress is not as acute thus far as two years ago. There is more feed available locally, there is less livestock and market prices are much higher.

Would Avoid Criticism.

Two years ago the department was criticised for not acting quickly enough to meet conditions. It was said to have been waiting vainly for rain. To prevent similar criticism, the department was buzzing with action yesterday as conferees called for statistics and advice from numerous divisions.

In the last drought, due to the delay in action, one of the first steps was the buying-up of livestock in stricken areas. If possible, this will be one of the latter steps in the present campaign, it was indicated, as regional WPA projects, active soil conservation and soil improvement work will be undertaken, and direct relief meted out.

At the drought committee's conference yesterday besides Tapp were C. W. Warburton, director of the Agricultural Extension Service; Hugh H. Bennett, chief of the Soil Conservation Service; A. G. Black, chief of the Bureau of Agricultural Economics, and W. F. Callander, assistant AAA administrator.

The immediate survey to be made by the Bureau of Agricultural Economics will determine the areas most affected, how much money is needed, and how funds should be allocated, it was reported. Mr. Black will head this survey.

The department will move soon to establish Federal feed information services throughout the affected spots to provide farmers with first-hand information on conditions.

West Virginia Hard Hit.

Charlestown, W. Va., June 29 (AP). An estimate of a $15,000,000 drought damage to West Virginia crops came today from Commissioner of Agriculture J. B. McLaughlin.

McLaughlin said:

"Our oats crop won't be more than one-fourth what it ordinarily would be; the pasturage has been cut in half at least. The corn crop is hanging in the balance. If we get rains in the next two or three weeks, the crop may be saved. Otherwise it will be a loss."

McLaughlin said there had been no general rain over the State for months and added:

"The situation now is alarming—in another week it certainly will be critical."

New Heat Records Set.

Atlanta, June 29 (AP).—A blistering sun set new heat records in the South Monday, with Newport, Tenn., experiencing a maximum of 106, its highest temperature in 30 years. Augusta, Ga., took second place with 105. Knoxville's 101 set a new June record there.

Other hot spots were Athens ,Ga., 101½; Macon, 101; Columbus, Ga., 101; Valdosta, Ga., 100; Birmingham, Ala., 100. Atlanta's downtown 99 was the highest since June, 1933. Nashville thermometers reached 98 with generally fair and continued warm weather forecast. Miami's maximum was 87; Jacksonville had 92; St. Petersburg, on the opposite coast of Florida, 89, and Tampa, 89.

McCarl Assails Spending

nature, were loosely and extravagantly set up and are tax-consuming in the extreme, may be promptly eliminated with such of their functions as may be proper for temporarily carrying on, assigned to the more economically organized regular establishments."

The President, who often has been at loggerheads with McCarl over release of Federal funds, and frequently has come off second best, already has given much thought to appointment of a successor who can work with the Administration. But McCarl's successor will outlive the Administration, and that fact also is being weighed. It is a 15-year job, not responsible to the Executive.

Harrison May Get Job.

It has been persistently rumored that the job may be held open for Senator Pat Harrison, of Mississippi, chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, just in case he is not re-elected to the Senate in November, but the report is without confirmation.

Morris S. Tremaine, comptroller of the State of New York, is known to be an important candidate for the office. Tremaine, who served as comptroller under the Smith, Roosevelt and Lehman governorships, conferred with President Roosevelt on his recent Southern trip, and later at Hyde Park.

The name of William H. McReynolds, administrative assistant to the Secretary of the Treasury, also has been mentioned. Asked if he would be "willing" to lose any of his staff to the office of comptroller, Secretary Morgenthau said yesterday:

"That is the only job I would be willing to lose them to and still smile."

Morgenthau expressed doubt that the President has yet made up his mind on whom he will appoint.

Among those who have been mentioned are Acting Budget Director Daniel Bell, Representative Clifton A. Woodrum, of Virginia; Representative Emmet O'Neal, of Kentucky; Frank J. Carr, TVA comptroller; Frank L. Yates, attorney-conferee to McCarl and Charles M. Galloway, General Accounting Office counsel.

McCarl, who has lived in the comptroller's office ever since its creation, built for himself, within the law, a new power in Government finance. His "no" became famous and final to Republican and Democratic President's alike. Government personnel often felt his official pinching of pennies, but the New Deal, with its billions to spend in a hurry, probably has learned to respect him most.

He has been no respecter of power outside the law. He knew his own. President Roosevelt felt his authority when McCarl vetoed his cherished tree-belt experiment. He refused to allow $33,000 for the erection of a factory at Mrs. Roosevelt's pet project at Reedsville, W. Va. Secretary of the Navy Swanson, backed up by the President and the Attorney General, was crossed by McCarl when Swanson ordered payment of the homeward bound traveling expenses of naval officers retired for age while on foreign stations.

One by one Secretary Ickes, Works Administrator Hopkins and Undersecretary of Agriculture Tugwell, felt the force of his hand. McCarl stook his ground. The Comptroller released millions of dollars for WPA and PWA, but only agreed to countersign Treasury warrants after Roosevelt, Ickes, Hopkins and Tugwell had revised their requests for funds to meet his objection.

So close did he hew to the line, that in the last year there was talk of curbing his powers, either by limiting his sphere of activity, or by a bold attempt to remove him from office, but it never passed the "talk" stage.

Nor was his pruning knife always limited to the larger ciphers. A reporter recalled that he saved the Government 17 cents on a clerk's railroad fare.

"Well," McCarl smiled yesterday, "you knew as well as I did that while it may have sounded like only 17 cents, that policy saved the Government thousands of dollars."

McCarl, who was in politics before he took office—President Harding appointed him in recognition of his services to the Republican Congressional committee—declined to discuss politics yesterday.

"Until tomorrow at midnight, I am still the Comptroller General of the United States," he said.

It was over politics that McCarl broke with Senator George W. Norris, who brought him to Washington as his secretary. McCarl left Norris, in a re-election year, to go with the Republican committee.

Wisconsin's Job Insurance Law Ready to Start

By the Associated Press.

Madison, Wis., June 29.—Wisconsin's new unemployment insurance law goes into effect on Wednesday.

Four hundred thousand workers will be eligible to receive benents under its provisions if they lose their jobs after it begins to operate on July 1.

A $12,000,000 fund will be on hand if payments are needed on the first day.

This cozy nest egg was built up by Wisconsin employers under the State unemployment insurance law since 1934. The statute took hold then to cover employers of 10 or more persons long before enactment of the Federal unemployment insurance clause in the national social security act.

The Wisconsin law was placed on the statute books by the 1931 special session of the Legislature. Enforcement, however, was delayed by the succeeding Legislature until 1934 because industry found itself financially unable to assume the cost.

In 1934 the employers began contributing up to 2 per cent of their monthly payrolls toward separate reserve accounts which have now reached $12,000,000 and will increase as time goes on.

Not until July 1 of last year was the full amount originally made subject to withdrawals for the benefit of workers laid off. The 1935 Legislature amended it, however, to dovetail with the Federal law. Full operation of the statute thus was delayed from July 1 to the same date this year.

Approximately 3,000 employers are affected and the 400,000 workers potentially eligible for assistance if they lose their jobs are those earning an average of $1,500 a year or less.

The minimum benefit is $5 a week. This is increased to $10 for those whose full time pay is $25 a week; to $12.50 for average pay of $25 to $30 a week; and to $15, the top rate, for workers who normally receive $30 a week.

The duration of the benefits depends on how long a person has worked for his employer after the probationary service period has expired.

Steak Fry Lures Gov. Alf Landon

By the Associated Press.

Estes Park, Colo., June 29.—A steak fry in the open lured Gov. Alf M. Landon, Republican Presidential nominee, tonight.

Accepting the invitation of newspapermen, the Governor assured:

The Kansas Governor conferred today with W. S. Rosecrans, Los Angeles Republican, announced that his campaign staff might join him from Topeka "in a day or two," and left a place on his schedule for a conference with Representative William A. Ekwall, Oregon, Republican.

It was reported authoritatively that W. B. Bell, of New York, chairman of the Republican finance committee, would confer with Landon Friday.

AMERICA SPEAKS

. . . in The Sunday Post

Before a poll among the voters of the Nation is taken, the editorial board of the American Institute of Public Opinion phrases the question to present the issue fairly to the voters. The proposed question is then submitted to editors of more than 70 newspapers for final approval. In the picture above, the editorial board of the Institute is shown in conference, Dr. George Gallup, Director, seated, center.

A representative of "Young America" marks her AMERICA SPEAKS ballot. From 100,000 to 200,000 men and women of voting age are polled on each issue. Some vote by mail, others with interviewers.

Here is shown a corner of the mailing room . . . important cog in the institute machine. Ballots are mailed to all parts of the country so that returns come back in correct proportion from persons in cities and on farms, from individuals at various income levels, from each political, social and economic group that might affect an actual election.

More than 250 trained interviewers are employed by the Institute to obtain opinions of persons who do not respond readily to mail questionnaires. One of these interviewers is shown above, questioning a Gloucester fisherman. The Institute was the first fact-gathering organization to employ both mail ballots AND personal interviewers to measure public opinion on a nation-wide scale.

These sacks filled with marked ballots are just a drop or two in the bucket as compared with the thousands at Institute headquarters weekly.

(Left) Tabulating machines that sort and count 420 cards per minute speed the work of recording information from the keyed cards. Returns are checked and re-checked to assure an accurate report of nation-wide public opinion.

And here, the final step in this intensive operation . . . presentation of the results each week to the reader. AMERICA SPEAKS, the National Weekly Poll of Public Opinion, is read in more than 7,000,000 homes every week. In the Nation's Capital, AMERICA SPEAKS appears exclusively in The Washington Post, each Sunday.

Cold facts become live news under the supervision of Dr. George Gallup, founder and director of the American Institute of Public Opinion. Above are shown trained newsmen, who analyze the results of each poll, translate them into news-story form, to appear in The Washington Post every Sunday and in more than 70 other leading American newspapers of all shades of editorial political opinion . . . Democratic, Republican and Independent.

America—as in no other country in the world—public sentiment still dictates the conduct of national affairs. If you want to know where the United States is going, and how it is going there . . . keep your eye on public opinion as reported by AMERICA SPEAKS . . . every Sunday in The Washington Post.

AMERICA SPEAKS, a poll of the voters of the Nation, conducted every week by the American Institute of Public Opinion, stands today as the only SCIENTIFIC barometer of public opinion operating on a large scale.

Repeatedly, this unique news service . . . first of its kind in the history of journalism . . . has called the turn on the sentiments of the man-in-the street, the average American voter, long before close students of the political scene have even suspected the trend. Last December 1, for instance, AMERICA SPEAKS showed Alfred M. Landon the popular choice among Republicans for the G. O. P. Presidential nomination. Throughout the months between December and the G. O. P. Convention in June, AMERICA SPEAKS reported Gov. Landon's rising popularity and, coincidentally, reported the strength of Franklin D. Roosevelt among major party voters.

Day-by-day current events bear out the accuracy of these impartial soundings of the American voter's viewpoint toward parties, candidates, platforms and major issues in national affairs.

AMERICA SPEAKS has no axe to grind . . . receives financial support only from the more than seventy newspapers—Democratic, Republican and Independent—which publish its weekly, Nation-wide polls. AMERICA SPEAKS reports are timely, significant and . . . above all . . . scientifically accurate.

Coming AMERICA SPEAKS Topics

Sunday, July 5 . . . "Are you in favor of continuing the CCC camps?" and "Should military training be part of the duties of those who attend?"

*Sunday, July 12 . . . "Which candidate do you favor as next President of the United States . . . Roosevelt, Landon?"

*In the last poll on the popularity of President Roosevelt with the voters of the Nation, reported in The Post last month, Mr. Roosevelt was indicated to have the support of 55.8 per cent of the voters . . . a Republican opponent, 44.2 per cent. But that was before the G. O. P. Presidential nomination went to Gov. Landon of Kansas. How will the naming of a Republican candidate affect the Roosevelt stand? The AMERICA SPEAKS release of July 12 will, for the first time in the history of the country, make it possible to know the relative standings of the two major party candidates within a month of their respective nominations, four months before the actual election. And, subsequent AMERICA SPEAKS polls, between now and November, will give a continuous check on the changing strength of the two candidates as the campaign develops.

Fourth of July Picnics Need Thinking Out

Whether Food Is to Be Hot or Cold, or Cooked on Site All Depends.

By Dorothea Duncan.

THE TYPE of food you select for your Fourth of July picnic whether it is to be hot or cold, cooked and prepared at home or at the picnic ground, will depend, of course, upon the place in which you intend to picnic and the facilities for cooking offered by this particular spot.

It is a good idea in preparing the picnic lunch to lay out first what would be needed to spread the informal table. Be sure you have sufficient plates, tumblers, cups, knives, forks, spoons, paper napkins, table cloth and salt and pepper shakers.

Thermos Jug Needed.

Plan on a thermos jug, of course, for hot beverages and for cold ones, too, unless you prefer to carry the latter in a bucket surrounded by ice. The picnic is apt to be a greater success if a really suitable basket or hamper is used, and for many persons a picnic is never complete unless there is something to be cooked on the spot. For such persons, an outdoor grill and long-handled fork of the type illustrated was especially invented.

Every housewife knows best what the members of her family enjoy eating on a picnic, but she should be practical about the amount she prepares. The following calculations may prove helpful:

One quart of salad will serve 6 persons.

One four-pound chicken will yield about 3 cups diced meat.

One-half pound coffee and 4 quarts boiling water will make enough of the beverage to serve 16 persons.

One and one-half dozen lemons will make enough lemonade to serve 20 to 25 persons, depending largely on the size and juiciness of the fruit.

Boiled Ham for Eight.

One pound of cold boiled ham will serve 6 to 8 persons and one pound of meat-loaf will provide for the same number.

Two-thirds cup creamed butter will spread both sides for 24 sandwiches. One pint of sandwich filling will fill 24 sandwiches.

The two menus suggested below will help you plan your Fourth of July picnic. The first suggests foods prepared at home, the second dishes that may be cooked in the open.

Italian Ambassador With Sister, Nephew

The Ambassador of Italy, Signor Augusto Rosso, with his sister, Signora Teresa Scurci, and her 11-year-old son, who arrived in this country last week to pay him a visit. When this picture was taken all three had just completed a flight over Washington with the Air and Military Attache of the embassy, Lieut. Col. Vincenzo Coppola.

Refrigeration Guards Health, Experts Assert

Housewives Now Conscious of Need of Proper Food Care.

Greater protection to the family health has resulted from the increasing use of modern refrigeration. Home economists point to a growing awareness throughout the country of the importance of proper food handling in the home.

The housewife today realizes that perishables, such as milk and butter, should not be allowed to stand at kitchen temperature, which promotes growth of minute organisms whose chemical action causes food spoilage, but should be placed immediately in the electric refrigerator, where safe preservation is assured.

Vegetables grown in or so close to the ground are likely to carry organisms from the soil, say food authorities. These should be washed before being placed in the food crisper or vegetable basket in the refrigerator. This precaution, plus visible proof that the refrigerator temperature is constantly low enough to inhibit the growth of these organisms, gives assurance that such organisms will not multiply, with consequent danger to health.

Seasonings and Cooks to Effect Saving on Costly Meat Dishes

Inexpensive Pieces Can Be Prepared Tastily With Spices; 3 Preparations of Shank of Ham Illustrate Plan.

WHEN YOU COOK with one eye on the budget and the other on the pleasures of the table you will find that you can get the optics into focus by concentrating your attention on seasonings. That is particularly true of the meat dishes where inexpensive pieces can be given succulence by long, slow cooking and flavor by the judicious use of spices.

An economical meat purchase that can yield several low-cost but delicious meals for a small family is the shank end of a ham. Enough slices can be cut from it for one meal after boiling, and the rest can be cubed, minced or chopped and combined with seasonings to make a variety of main dishes or tasty luncheon sandwiches.

It is true of most foods, and doubly so of meats, that flavor is more subtle and therefore more pleasing if it is cooked in rather than added at the table. Serve condiments with the meal for palates that like extra sharpness but do not depend upon them to permeate the meat.

Boiled Ham With Vegetables.

1 shank end of ham
6 small potatoes
1 cabbage, quartered
4 medium carrots, quartered
6 small onions
4 small turnips, quartered
⅛ teaspoon pepper
1 teaspoon salt
1 teaspoon dry mustard

Plunge the ham shank into boiling water, add the seasonings and simmer one hour. Add the turnips and cook 10 minutes before adding the rest of the vegetables. Cook for 30 minutes longer.

Ham a la King.

Make a cream sauce, adding ½ teaspoon dry mustard, ⅛ teaspoon pepper, 3 tablespoons diced green pepper, 1½ cups sauted mushrooms and 2 cups of diced cooked ham. Cook together, stirring constantly, for five minutes, then serve on buttered toast.

Minced Ham Sandwiches.

To ½ cup salad dressing add 1 teaspoon dry mustard, 3 tablespoons chopped pickle, ¼ cup chopped green pepper, ⅛ teaspoon pepper and ¼ teaspoon salt. Combine thoroughly, then stir in 2 cups of cooked ham, finely ground. Spread on buttered bread with lettuce.

Course Is Offered In Dude Ranching

Wyoming U. Takes Up Subject in Serious Way.

By the Associated Press.

Portland, Oreg., June 29.—The University of Wyoming has gone into the subject of dude ranching in a serious way, so serious, in fact, it is officially called "recreational ranching."

"We have a new course for the training of workers in recreational ranching, commonly called dude ranching," said Dr. Arthur G. Crane, president, who was here today for the National Education Association convention.

"Dude ranching is becoming a big business in Wyoming, totaling $10,000,000 annually now; it will be many times this in a few years.

"When a family comes from the East to vacation with the 'dudes,' every member must be satisfied or they all leave; mama maybe only wants to pick wild flowers, dad goes fishing, Jimmy and Josephine are wild about horses.

"Our graduates are fitted to help everyone, and also to keep the books, collect funds and to feed the guests."

The course, offered for the first time last fall, includes culture of stock, the natural sciences, accounting, business law, catering, hotel management, English and history.

Bay Scientists War on Jellyfish, Summer Bathers' Perennial Foe

By the Associated Press.

Solomons Island, Md., June 29.—Studies which may serve to reduce or eliminate that perennial pest of summer bathers, the sea nettle or jellyfish, were under way today at the Chesapeake Biological Laboratory.

Robert Littleford and Dr. R. V. Truitt, the head of the laboratory, are both at work on the investigation of the life history of the jellyfish. Both men are attached to the University of Maryland.

The life of the crab is also being studied. Roy Robertson, of the Elkton High School, and Dr. Grace Homes are engaged on the crab studies. The results of their work may be reflected in conservation measures to increase the dwindling supply of the crustaceans.

Both the crab and the jellyfish are common in the Chesapeake Bay, but little formal study of them has been made. Other studies being pressed concern the microflora, which provide most of the fish food in the bay, and the physiological and hydrographic studies of the bay itself.

Dr. H. C. Bold, of Vanderbilt University, and Dr. Paul Conger, of the Carnegie Institution of Washington, are working on microflora. Dr. Norman Phillips and C. L. Newcombe are engaged in the other research problem.

The formal classes at the laboratory are held only in the summer. The only undergraduates enrolled are those majoring in biology. Many applicants were turned away because the classes are limited to eight persons.

The laboratory was established five years ago after several years of summer study in temporary buildings.

Amana Colonies Wives Return To Home Life

College-Bred Young Women Back Change in Communists' Customs.

By the United Press.

Ames, Iowa, June 29.—Several hundred members of Iowa's seven Amana colonies, only true communistic group in the Nation, slowly are loosening the iron grip of tradition and giving way to a modified capitalistic mode of life.

The black-bonneted women of the colonies were confronted tonight with new problems of home management. For the first time since the original colonists came here from Germany late in the last century, the women are preparing their meals in their own homes. This change is one of the first steps in breaking up the customs that have made the Amana colonies almost self-sustaining.

Until the village rulers decided home life would be better served and perpetuated by returning to the family dinner table, the colonists had eaten in a large banquet hall and the meals had been prepared in large kitchens by the women.

Women in five of the seven colonies are now studying a course in the business side of home-making under Florence Schuerman, a home demonstration agent, and a more extensive series of courses in the study of family nutrition is being planned next fall.

Bernstorff Pens Biography.

Announcement that Count Johann H. von Bernstorff, Ambassador of Germany, in Washington from the last days of the Theodore Roosevelt Administration to America's entry into the World War, is writing his autobiography, which will be fraught with interest for Washington society.

The dapper little count, now 74, surely must include chapters of his Washington years in such a book. Aside from international and political angles, these should be most colorful, for Count von Bernstorff and his American wife, formerly Miss Jeanne Luckemeyer, daughter of a German-American banker, of New York, reigned in the huge embassy on Massachusetts avenue during the most brilliant epoch of recent Washington life.

It was a time when embassy balls and dinners were given each evening in some diplomatic or official home and in the great mansions of the private citizens which added to the gayety of Capital seasons.

A coterie of American wives of foreign diplomats presided over many Washington embassies while the Bernstorffs were here. There was Mme. Jusserand, wife of the French Ambassador; Mme. Riano, wife of the Spanish Ambassador, who was Miss Alicia Ward, of New York; Mme. Bakhmeteff, wife of the imperial Russian Ambassador, formerly Miss Mary Beale, sister of the late Mrs. John R. McLean, and several others.

The pretty daughter of the Bernstorff household, Countess Alexandra, who afterward married, added to the brilliancy of Washington's younger set by the parties she gave at the Embassy. The story goes that the day the Bernstorffs arrived in Washington was the one on which Miss Ethel Roosevelt was making her debut at the White House. Mrs. Roosevelt heard there was a young girl in the Von Bernstorff family and sent a special invitation for her to attend and thus the young Countess made her first bow to Washington society at the debut party in the White House of the President's daughter.

Diet Suggested In Treatment Of Bone Cases

Exact Cause of Paget's Disease Not Known by Physicians.

By Dr. Irving S. Cutter.

One afternoon in the autumn of 1856 Sir James Paget, then England's most distinguished surgeon, was consulted by a patient whose disease was to make him famous. The man complained of pain in the thighs and legs, that was increased whenever he indulged in exercise. Gradually with the lapse of time his limbs became "less serviceable" and about a year later he noticed that his left shin was distorted. Meanwhile his general health was unaffected. At the examination Surgeon Paget found that the left half of the large bone of the lower leg was broad, flat, nodular and uneven.

Three years later the patient was examined again, and the same bone (tibia) had increased in size with a definite forward curve. The left thigh bone was also enlarged and was arched forward and outward, so that the left knee could not be brought into contact with the right one.

This was the first identified case of what is today known as Paget's disease or osteitis deformans, and was reported by Sir James with other cases of like character 20 years later. The disease is one of the most curious that affects the bony skeleton and it appears in middle life or later. It is characterized by an extensive bending of the long bones (thigh bones in particular) and by irregular deformities of the flat bones. Men are more susceptible than women.

Obscure Symptoms.

Minor and obscure symptoms may be complained of long before the slightest evidence of deformity appears. These may simulate rheumatic attacks. Sometimes periods of stiffness and discomfort on walking becomes manifest. Pain, weakness, and difficulty in locomotion are cardinal signs. The symptoms develop so slowly and gradually, however, that the diagnosis is rarely possible until the disease is well advanced.

As the condition progresses the entire skeleton may be involved. The bones become uneven, irregular and overgrown, and contain areas that are spongy in some parts and ivory-hard in others. Certain portions of the skull may exhibit the characteristic increase—in fact, the only signs of the disease may appear in an enormously thickened and enlarged cranium. In advanced cases shortening in stature—sometimes as much as 6 inches—may be observed. Not infrequently, however, the changes are limited to one side of the body or to one or two bones, and may become stationary, producing but slight deformity. Since most of the afflicted are past middle life, the signs of old age become increasingly evident. The hair is scant and the nails are thicker and more brittle.

Cause Unknown.

The exact cause of Paget's disease is unknown, although a tendency to gout, rheumatism, arthritis and trouble with the endocrine glands are thought to influence its onset. There seems reasonable ground also for believing that some upset in calsium metabolism is primarily responsible. For this reason special diets, including irradiated foods, sunbaths and rest are suggested.

Just how the parathyroid glands, which lie close to the thyroid in the neck and control calcium metabolism, affect the condition is not clear, although Paget's disease has been produced experimentally in animals by feeding great quantities of parathyroid extract. It is possible that some relief may be hoped for in the future as our knowledge of gland therapy increases. The adrenals may play a part also, and feeding the outer portion of these structures (cortex), plus a large amount of calcium, has been reported to be successful in arresting the progress of this distorting malady in a few cases.

The final solution awaits more investigation into the problem of why calcium (lime) wanders in such strange ways about the body. Possibly our chemists will point the way.

Things That Make Women More Beautiful

Posed by Mitzi Mayfair.

Here's Eye Lotion Which May Also Be Used as Skin Freshener, Astringent.

By Mignon.

(The Mignon who writes this column does not sell, indorse or manufacture any cosmetics.)

IT MUST be a pleasant surprise to a manufacturer to bring out a product designed to do one thing and then to discover that it does two or three things, all of them equally well. For instance, there is an eye lotion which for the life of me I couldn't tell you much about, as far as contents are concerned, except that it does what it is advertised to do and does it magnificently.

I have discovered that as a skin freshener it ranks among the best. There is a cool, fresh feeling after you use it, and for an oily skin I would say there isn't anything better.

Of course, the way I like to see skin freshener used (and the way it is usually applied) is after a massage. I don't know what this lotion would do as a freshener, if it were used without plenty of cream—but I wouldn't use it except after cold cream, and plenty of it.

After cleaning your face and thoroughly soaking it with a good cream, a light one if your skin is oily and a heavy one if it is dry, I would, especially if I had an oily skin, apply this lotion with cotton as the last step in my facial before applying a foundation cream.

The lotion is not a cleanser but it is slightly stimulating, pore closing and extremely freshening.

Landscape Belts Are Chic in Paris

Longchamp (AP).—Eight-strand pearl necklaces and landscaped belts were some of the little things that "counted big" in fashions at a recent racing meet here.

The pearls hung in serried ranks around the neck of a chic Parisian dressed all in black, and she flanked them with two pear-shaped pearls in pendant earrings. Big diamond brooches also filled important roles. They fastened simple Eton collars, or decorated afternoon frocks and hats.

Country scenes were embroidered on belts. These featured placid sheep and hens against a background of green trees and grass. Suits and dresses were belted in this picturesque fashion. Plain belts had fancy buckles. A silver one represented a spaniel's head with long drooping ears.

Mother Urged To Aid Child's Self-Reliance

Women Should Guard Against Patronizing, Expert Declares.

By Alice Clarissa Richmond.

EVERY HUMAN being wants to feel big and strong and superior. To treat those smaller and weaker than one's self with patronage often bolsters up the self-respect of those who are lacking in self-confidence. So one often sees a man who insists on treating his wife as though she were helpless and lacking in intelligence, when actually she is quite as able to take care of herself as he is.

Women are apt to take out this desire for power on their children. Long after the child should be independent or at least starting to do things for himself, his mother is still guiding and watching him. The child never has any training in taking care of himself, and when he must finally face the world he is bound to be at a disadvantage.

It is a mother's duty and an expression of real love for her child to make the youngster self-reliant and independent as soon as possible. He should learn to feed and dress himself to get about from place to place on his own at the earliest possible moment. Little by little he should be left to make his own decisions and abide by the results even though they may be unpleasant at times.

To compensate for one's own deficiencies at the expense of one's children may feed the mother's own feeling of adequacy, but it is very unfair to the child who must and will in turn have to stiffen his self-respect by finding some one to coddle.

The baby in arms can be trained to some amount of independence, and from then on the child should find his opportunities of action and free thought increase from day to day. The added respect which he will give his mother will in the end more than repay her for her self-control in letting him grow up.

Sea-Going Sisters Parted by Death

Joint Stewardship of N. Y. Women Is Ended.

Glen Cove, N. Y., June 29 (AP).—A remarkable companionship of two sea-going sisters, the only women yacht club stewards in America, ended today with the death of Capt. Mame Miller. She was in her late fifties.

She died of pneumonia at the home she shared with her younger sister, Capt. Ella Miller. When their father, Capt. Charles A. Miller, died 30 years ago, the Hempstead Harbor Yacht Club unanimously elected the sisters to share the post of steward left vacant by him.

Old-time yachtsmen of Long Island Sound testified there was no seaman's task the sisters could not perform and they were "at home" in any gale. They dressed alike in nautical attire, kept houe together and, despite their chosen vocations, were extremely feminine in tastes and manners.

Capt. Mame won several victories in Sound regattas while sailing J. P. Morgan's 31-foot yacht Opal in past years.

MARY HAWORTH'S MAIL

19-Year-Old Girl Whose Family Doesn't Understand Her Asks Advice on Heart Problem.

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I am a 19-year-old girl living here in Washington with my family. None of my family seems able to understand my affairs. When I tell them I am in love they laugh at me. Three weeks ago I met a very darling young man to whom I am greatly attached. We have been seeing each other steadily since then. Two nights ago he asked me to marry him.

• • • •

I think I love him enough to accept, but I am not sure whether it is sincere, for I often wonder whether it is just to get away from my family. The man has a well paid position with great opportunities. He has no real family and do you think, Miss Haworth, that he is just seeking sympathy after several years' loneliness? I am afraid to give him my answer until I have heard from you.

• • • •

Since I am only 19, I am not sure that I want to settle down as yet. I want you to understand that this is not my first proposal, but it is the only one that I have ever considered. He is so sweet, and he remembers every little thing, so I am sure that he would make any girl an ideal husband. Do you think he loves me? Do you think our marriage would last? Do you think it is infatuation? Please advise me, as I will be watching your column every morning.

IN LOVE.

• • • •

DEAR IN LOVE: I think it would probably be a very serious mistake for you to marry this young man now, or even to say "yes" to his proposal of marriage, since you are in such a state of uncertainty about everything, and since both you and your family know so little about him. It is very likely, as you say, that you are more interested in getting away from home than you are in becoming this man's wife.

• • • •

I believe if I were you I would have a frank talk with the young man and tell him exactly what you have told me here. If he really loves you he will be entirely willing to give you all the time you need and all the time you want to discover the true nature of your feeling for him. He won't mind waiting months or even a year or two for you to make up your mind definitely in his favor—that is, he won't if his love for you is genuine and not a passing infatuation or a desire to possess you physically.

• • • •

As a compromise you might tell him you are willing to become tentatively engaged to him; that is, you are willing to promise to be his best girl and have him for your best and only beau for a few months, in order that each of you may have opportunity to become better acquainted with the other and discover if you are mentally, spiritually and socially compatible.

• • • •

It is a matter of regret that your family insists on laughing at you when you say you are in love. Perhaps the best way to convince them of the seriousness of the present situation would be to have the young man talk to your mother and tell her he wishes to marry you and that he has spoken to you of marriage. If he is really serious, he should be willing to do this. He might tell your mother that you do not yet know your mind, and he feels you might be helped in reaching the right decision if you were free to talk the situation over with her.

• • • •

If neither of you is willing to make the effort necessary to awaken your family to a realization of the fact that marriage is being discussed, then the only thing for you to do is to be very cautious and deliberate in finding your way unaided through the situation. Whatever you do, don't marry an unknown young man after three weeks' acquaintanceship, no matter how sweet and thoughtful he may seem; no matter how good his salary and how promising his future. The chances are 100 to 1 against a marriage made on such short acquaintance turning out successfully.

• • • •

It is not possible for me to say with authority whether or not the young man loves you. It may be that he does, but it is up to him to prove it by refraining from rushing you into a hasty and ill considered marriage. If he truly loves you he won't marry you so long as he knows you are not yet definitely committed to a desire to settle down with him to a lifetime of routine responsibility.

• • • •

Time was when a girl of 19 was mature enough to accept the responsibilities of marriage with a full consciousness of the gravity of the step she was taking, but the average girl of 19 today is a rather immature creature who needs two or three more years of social life or experience in the business world to round her into a responsible-minded young woman. Therefore, take my advice and stick with your family a while longer. To marry this young man now just in order to get away from a bunch of relatives who refuse to take your seriously, or to attempt to try to understand your emotional storms and anxieties, would very probably be to find yourself removed from the frying pan into the fire. Father's Comment.

DEAR MISS HAWORTH: Your answer in Wednesday's paper to "Mother of Four" was, in my opinion, the best of your many very good articles that appear daily in The Post. As a father, I agree with you absolutely. I try to follow a rule that I once read on how to bring up children: "Love them, set them a good example, and leave them alone." Cordially yours,

MAN READER.

• • • •

DEAR MAN READER: Thank you, sir, for those kind words. I happen to be a parent, too, and while I had never before read the rule you have set for yourself, I believe it compresses in a nutshell the philosophy I have tried to live by in giving my children opportunity to find themselves in relation to the universe: "Love them, set them a good example, and leave them alone." M. H.

Bargains in 'Girls' Offered for Sale

But They Are Only Show-Window Manikins.

Cincinnati, June 29 (AP).—They offered bargains in "girls" today. Prices ranged from $8.50 for a "slim little lassie" to $100 for a "buxom outdoor girl" and $200 for the latest creation, a transparent "cellanese lady."

Placed on auction before 1,500 show window decorators and others attending the convention, the "girls" were surrounded by 11 the dazzling glitter, brilliant color and fascinating decorative effects used in store windows.

Lifelike and graceful, the manikins were made of papier mche, of wood, of rubber and various compositions. Some were mere wire outlines of what a feminine form should be.

105-Yr.-Old Praises U. S. Girls of Today

Florida Veteran Says They 'Know the Answers.'

St. Petersburg, Fla., June 29 (U.P.). Celebrating his 105th birthday, Charles W. Eldredge today slapped young America on the back.

"Girls of 20 are twice as well fitted to face the world as the girls of 80 years ago," he said. "Besides, they know all the answers. They are healthier and wear less cumbersome and needless clothes, spend less time fixing their hair and they are no longer old at 50."

Eldredge's chief wish was that he might live until fall so that he could cast his twenty-third Presidential vote for Gov. Alf M. Landon.

Eldredge is manage rof a baseball team of players more than 75 years old.

G. O. P. Victory Predicted By Committeewoman

Natalie Couch, Visiting N. Y. Republican, Looks for 'Tough Fight.'

MISS NATALIE COUCH.

DECLARING THAT women are "rallying around the cause as they never have before," and that "this will be a campaign of facts, not of fancy," Natalie Couch, head of the women's work for the National Republican Committee, yesterday voiced the opinion that "this will be a tough fight, but will result in a sweeping victory for our candidate."

Miss Couch came to Washington from her home in Grand-View-on-Hudson, N. Y., to confer with Mrs. Wilma D. Hoyal, general director of the women's division for the National Republican Committee. It was in Mrs. Hoyal's office that she emphasized, "Republican women are all set and ready to go. We have our speakers lined up; we have our entire campaign organized and already under way. You will see women working from now until November as you've never seen them work for any other election."

Women Aroused.

She pointed out that the extravagant expenditure of the New Deal Administration has thoroughly aroused feminine America. "Women resent a waste of money, even in running a home," she went on. "And after all, the Government is nothing more or less than housekeeping on a big scale. Women are naturally economical. That is one reason they will vote against the New Deal and for Gov. Landon."

Miss Couch's territory will include the States on the Atlantic seaboard from Maine to Florida. She expects to spend some time stumping the territory and much time delegating other women to take to the platform. "We have more trained speakers to put into the field today than in any previous campaign," she said. "And every one of them goes into the fight armed with facts that can stand on their own feet. After three long years of observing an Administration that has broken campaign promises, launched a vast spending program that taxpayers will never get through paying for and sought to increase its popularity by grandstand play and misrepresentation, it isn't difficult to find plenty of selling points for the Republican Party."

Fight New Dealers.

The fight is not against the Democrats but the New Dealers, Miss Couch said. "The old-line Democrats have either publicly taken a walk or are remaining silent and will speak only with their vote against Roosevelt in November."

Though she expects this summer and autumn to be as busy as any she has ever spent in her life, Miss Couch looks forward to the entire campaign with a zest that has characterized her career since she graduated from Wellesley College and returned to her family home to find that she would have to earn her own living. Her father, Dr. Louis B. Couch, was crippled for life after a fall down an elevator shaft in New York.

Entering the Y. W. C. A. dressmaking school, she later turned to stenography and eventually got a job in a lawyer's office. After ten years of working for Judge Tompkins, she entered Fordham Law School and was graduated three years later.

She is still a secretary of Judge Tompkins, but she is also the only woman lawyer in Rockland County and has two men attorneys on her staff.

And Call It Accident

By Mrs. Belloc Lowndes

CHAPTER NINETEEN.

They were now close to the granite flight of steps, and there, rather to Ruth's surprise, stood the groom. She wondered what he had been doing with himself while waiting for their return, and she felt rather sorry for him. As a matter of fact the young man had been in the castle kitchen, having quite a good time with the two girls there. He had entertained them with a lively account of the astonishment felt at the manor house when it had become known that his lordship was going out riding with a young lady! Such a thing had never been known before, not even when there were some right down "lovelies" staying there. The housekeeper had said she wondered what Lord John's mamma would think of it all if, as was understood, this American lady was an actress.

But naturally nothing of what he was thinking or feeling showed on his stolid respectful face as he came forward to take the two horses.

"You needn't wait, I'll walk home," said Lord John, smiling. And then he assumed the mask he usually wore in every day life, that of a cynical and thoroughly disillusioned man of the world.

After a certain delay the door was opened by a cheerful looking girl with a very red face, and as she stepped back, she smiled broadly. After she had opened the door of the great hall and shut it behind her, Ruth's escort observed, "What a welcoming, pleasant looking young woman!"

"She is the cook," said Ruth, and she was puzzled, for she felt sure that her hostess would have much disapproved of the cook opening the front door. Iris not only required, she obtained, a considerable measure of discipline from those she employed.

As she walked back into the kitchen cook observed to the other girl: "Well? I've had a good look at them, and I do believe all that Jackanapes said is true. They are Beauty and the Beast, and no mistake."

Philip Is Cheery.

Meanwhile "Beauty and the Beast" were not left long alone in the great hall, for soon Philip hurried in with a cheery "Hullo! I hope you had a jolly gallop on the downs. Iris will be here in a minute, meanwhile—" he turned to Ruth, "I'll start the kettle boiling for tea."

He scarcely looked at his cousin, and it would have been plain to any onlooker that there was no love lost between the two men.

Ruth, meanwhile, was feeling extraordinarily happy, nay more, blithesome, to use a dear old word. She was moved and pleased that this clever man should have asked humbly for her friendship.

Meanwhile the subject of her thoughts approached her host: "When you've done fiddling with that kettle, I'd like a word with you."

Philip Trefane put a match to the spirit stove, and then he and Lord John went over to the other window.

"My mother wants me to ask you about that bathroom; have you any idea what it will cost?"

"Her half of it would be a good bit more than Iris told her 'twould be. But as a matter of fact Ruth Starling," the name slipped easily off his tongue, "is quite determined to pay for it all. And why shouldn't she?"

"I should like you to send me the bill for that bathroom," Lord John said quietly. "I told my mother I should pay it."

The door behind them opened, and to Philip Trefane's annoyance came the words: "Here's Troy, wanting a word with you, sir," and the old sailor lurched in.

Greets Troy.

Lord John walked forward and grasped the old man's hand with "How are you Troy? It seems ages since we met last! By the way, her ladyship asked me to have a look at the motorboat this afternoon. Will you be about if I come down to the shore after I've had tea with Mrs. Trefane?"

Iris came into the hall, and the old sailorman was turning away and on his way out of the door, when suddenly he addressed Ruth Starling: "I do thank ye most gratefully, miss, for that gran' present you sent me by Rose Atkins. I did no more than my dooty yesterday. 'Twas Mrs. Trefane 'as rescued you from a watery grave."

Lord John glanced with astonishment first at the girl and then at the old man. But he made no comment, while yet throwing a questioning, inquiring look at his cousin. Philip Trefane looked black as thunder.

Meanwhile Troy was getting himself out of the door, which he closed noisily behind him.

Lord John approached the table where Iris was now pouring out the boiling water into the teapot. "Is it true you saved Miss Starling from drowning yesterday?" he asked quietly.

"No, of course it isn't! She and Phil went out in the boat bathing, and somehow or other while they were in the water, the boat drifted away. I saw what happened from the shore, so I made Troy get out the motorboat as they were some way out. That was why that old liar absurdly said I rescued Ruth from a watery grave."

Defends Iris.

She spoke in a low voice, and then rather quickly she exclaimed: "Please don't let your mother know that I ordered the motorboat to be got out! I know it would make her angry, and perhaps I was a fool to do it."

"My mother angry because you took the boat out to help Philip and Miss Starling to get back? Believe me, you allow your dislike of my mother to make you most unjust. All the same, of course, I promise you to say nothing about it."

With the exception of Philip no one ate anything of the good fare provided. There was feeling of constraint among the party of four, and Ruth felt sorry indeed that she hadn't followed her instinct, and told Lord John the truth concerning her adventure of yesterday.

At last he got up. "I'd better go to the beach now, and look at the motorboat, and I'll say good-by, for it's time I went home."

Philip called out: "You'd better come down through the trap door. I'll come and pull it up for you. And by the way, John, I have to admit that I broke into the locker of the boat and had a swig at the bottle of brandy. As a matter of fact, I had an attack of cramps in the water and that frightened Iris, for I'd never had such a thing happen before."

Lord John felt amused. This, then, was why such a silly secret had been made about the affair; of course Philip had had no right to force open the locker of his aunt's motorboat, and, having done so, he ought to have written and told her the truth. However, the truth, so he told himself with emphasis was the last thing one could expect from the man who now stood before him, with a deprecating, awkward expression on his good-looking face.

"O, that will be all right," he said hastily. "We'll have the lock repaired, and the bottle of brandy fixed up without mother knowing anything about it.

To Be Continued.

STUCK FOR WORDS—and so anxious to have that letter to Jack sound just right!

Oh, sail right in, Dorothy. No stalling around with "I ought to have written sooner," or "I don't know what you will think of me for not writing," or "We are all well, how are you?"

Make a simple, direct start: "Dear Jack:

"There's a grand thunder shower going on, and our street has been enjoying the show. This included watching dear old Grandpa Harris tying an umbrella to the doof of the little coop where the hen and chicks live, and seeing the five Adams children bouncing on the lawn in their bathing suits.

"I hope, now you have that new car, you'll be driving back to the home town as often as you can . . ." and so on.

No formal, stiff phrasing. Just the language of pleasant, every-day speech. Correct salutation. No cheap errors such as "Dear friend," She will sign it "Sincerely yours," or "Friend Jack," or "Hi old kid." "Cordially yours," or "All kinds of cheery greetings from the old crowd."

PLEASANT HOMES

By Elizabeth MacRae Boykin.

THEY'RE the greatest family for going places! They met in Venice when they were students bumming around on next to nothing in the way of money. Who wouldn't fall in love in a place like that? Anyway everybody said their gypsy days were over when they settled down to a mortgage and a baby, but everybody said wrong. Because they tuck aside part of the pay envevope very religiously every single month and when vacation time comes, they pack up, bag and baby and start out for someplace. He's a teacher, lucky dog, so they have vacations worthy of the name.

She's got quite a flare for collecting things that make their home interesting. Menus, for instance—she picks up a menu from restaurants in various parts and of the country, and in foreign countries. They have a small informal dining room—really a made over sun porch—that she has papered with menus from famous and unusual restaurants. A coat of clear shellac over the surface gave it a nice antique look and protected the menus at the same time.

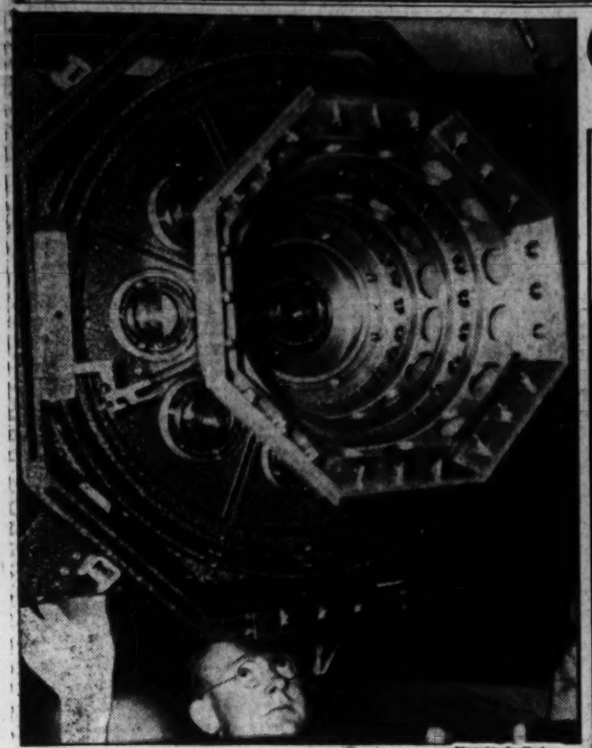

The kitchen she's made quite amusing with signs collected from road houses and hot dog stands advertising everything from a chocolate - marshmallow - pecan - whipped-cream-sundae to a short order of ham—and for a quarter complete with fried potatoes, cole slaw and sardines! It's really lots of fun for kitchen decorations.

Their basement game room is all "stuck up" with railroad time tables and travel circulars . . .they make delightful wall patterns for a room of this sort.

WPA Leaves Are Granted 5,000 Clerks

Absence for Sickness, Vacations With Pay Are Authorized.

Former McCarl Ruling Countermanded After Conferences.

Aubrey Williams, deputy WPA administrator, yesterday authorized sick leave and vacation with pay for 5,000 administrative employes of the governmental agency who are paid from Federal coffers.

The decision, reached after a series of conferences yesterday between WPA Union representatives and WPA officials, countermands a former ruling by Comptroller General McCarl, who will be retired today.

Fourteen representatives of five WPA unions, which are affiliated with the American Federation of Labor, were notified of the concession after they spent a day in conference with four WPA officials. The representatives were from Washington, Chicago, New York and Philadelphia.

Specific Classification.

Result of the conferences yesterday were these specific classifications of administrative, supervisory, research and clerical employes of project pay rolls of the Federal WPA:

1. They are to be considered administrative employes.
2. Their weekly working hours shall consist of 39 hours which is the same as other administrative employes paid from the administrative pay roll, and are entitled to sick and annual leave.
3. Their salaries as other WPA administrative employes are on an annual basis and,
4. They are not entitled to receive credit for time lost because of inclement weather or for any other reason.

State Aids Not Affected.

The provisions, which will become effective as soon as necessary papers are signed by WPA Administrator Harry L. Hopkins, do not affect workers on State pay rolls.

Yesterday's decision of WPA officials came, union officials said, as the result of protracted conferences over a period of several months.

The previous ruling of Comptroller McCarl, which would not have granted leave and vacation with pay, was to have become effective tomorrow.

Union officials said they understood the new ruling would become effective within a few days.

Early yesterday, the WPA union workers, led by Dorothy Lasher, of New York, started their series of conferences with WPA officials. First they saw Dean R. Brinhall, of the Labor Relations Section, who represented Administrator Williams.

Favored by Williams.

Second conference was with Aubrey Williams, who on the basis of the union's testimony before Brinhall, told the delegates he was in favor of granting their requests if minor technicalities could be smoothed out.

These technicalities were adjusted in a third conference with Fred S. Bartlett, director of the Division of Finance and Reports, and Carl Borders, assistant to the director of Statistics and Finance.

It was agreed that an administrative order, signed by Administrator Hopkins, would be issued after approval of the order by the WPA's legal division.

Representing the Washington Union was Samuel Liss, of Lodge 139.

Father O'Hara Honored by 700 At Church Fete

Priest, Who Ministered to School Bus Victims, Takes New Post.

A reception at Holy Comforter School Hall, attended by nearly 700 persons, was tendered the Rev. Charles R. O'Hara, Catholic priest who gave the last rites of the church to 14 children, victims of the Rockville, Md., bus tragedy last April, as he became pastor of the Holy Comforter Church, yesterday.

Thomas J. Collins, chairman of the reception, introduced the priest and Joseph Gammell, president of the Lincoln Park Citizens Association, made the welcoming speech.

Gammell began his address by reminding Father O'Hara that a new church building was desired by the parishioners to replace the present structure at Fourteenth and East Capitol streets.

The speaker outlined proposed plans for development to be made in the eastern section of Washington and the important part he, as a member of the clergy, would have to play in the next few years.

The priest, robust and jolly by nature, assured the members of the parish he would assume all his duties without shirking and promised to lay the groundwork for a new church building.

Father O'Hara, who was patsor of St. Mary's Church, Rockville, for seven years, succeeds the Rev. James E. O'Connell, who died last June. He was pastor of Our Lady, Star of the Sea, Church, at Indianhead, for 11 years. Piror to that time he was assistant pastor of St. Patrick's Church, Cumberland, Md.

Speeches of commendation of Father O'Hara were made by the Rev. Joseph F. Denges and the Rev. Edward J. Nestor, assistant pastors at Holy Comforter, and the Rev. Joseph E. Buckley, pastor of St. Francis Xavier's Church. Music was provided by the school band and a quartet composed of Edna Howard, Estelle Dean, Joseph P. O'Lone and Rita Lepore.

Father O'Hara was praised by Montgomery County officials and newspapermen for his work attending and comforting the children mangled along the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad tracks at Rockville after a train crashed into a Williamsport, Md., school bus.

Stage Lovers Plan to Re-enact 'Romeo and Juliet' in Actuality

Couple Who Played Together Four Years Ago in Shakespearean Contest Do Balcony Scene in Earnest at Shoreham.

Four years ago a couple of Ohio high school students—Nan Johnson and Robert McWilliams—played Romeo and Juliet in a Shakespearean contest. Yesterday they re-enacted the balcony scene on the terrace of the Shoreham Hotel but this time it was the real thing.

No more play-acting romance for them, they said. They're going to get married and be Romeo and Juliet for the rest of their lives.

"She's the first girl I ever had," said 21-year-old McWilliams.

"And he's my first and only boy friend," beamed Nan, a year his junior. Both were graduated three weeks ago from Ohio Wesleyan University.

Both Got Scholarships.

Through playing Romeo and Juliet four years ago they won a good deal more than each other. Both were awarded scholarships to the university for their entire college course. In the Shakespearean contest Nan represented her high school in Kenton, Ohio. McWilliams represented his school in Elyria, Ohio. That was their first meeting.

"And it was the only time we ever played opposite each other on the stage," explained the tall, blond young man. "Maybe that's why we decided to play opposite each other in real life."

Nan said she has given up all thought of a business or professional career.

"I've got something more important planned now," she said as she smiled up at McWilliams.

Rejected Stage Offers.

Not long ago her fiance was offered a part in a touring company of "Tobacco Road" and had a tentative offer from New York producers. But he turned them down and accepted a job selling insurance, because, he explained:

"I want to go into business so I'll make money quicker and then we can get married sooner."

Nan came to Washington several days ago to visit Robert's sister, Miss Francelia McWilliams, 1628 K street northwest. She is planning to get a job here so she can stay while Robert is in Hartford, Conn., learning how to break down the resistence of prospective policy holders. He came here yesterday to visit both his sister and Nan and will go to Connecticut next week.

'Pierre Patelin' To Be Presented

Girl Reserves, Boy Scouts to Aid in Seating Guests at Performance.

Mrs. Elizabeth K. Peeples, chairman of the summer festival committee, will be assisted by Mrs. John Albert Hunter and groups of Girl Reserves and Boy Scouts tonight in receiving and seating the guests of honor at the performance of "Pierre Patelin," to be presented at the National Sylvan Theater.

Members of the summer festival committee who will attend the production include Mr. C. Marshall Finnan, Mr. Frederic A. Delano, Mrs. Henry Grattan Doyle, Mrs. Isaac Gans, Miss Edith Grosvenor, Mr. Curtis Hodges, Mr. Thomas E. Lodge, Col. E. L. Mattice and Mr. C. Melvin Sharpe.

Guests of honor invited for the occasion are the Attorney General and Mrs. Homer Cummings, Mr. J. Edgar Hoover and other officials of the Department of Justice. The play is being presented by the Theater Group of the Bureau of Investigation.

Prisoners Viewed By Commissioners In Police Line-Up

Commissioners Melvin C. Hazen and Dan I. Sultan and their wives and guests, were present at the line-up at Police Headquarters last night.

More than 25 "suspicious characters" were viewed by Inspector Bernard Thompson, chief of detectives, and his aids. Lieut. Clarence Tally supervised examination of the suspects.

The line-up was the largest this year in which all the prisoners have been white.

Fifteen of the suspects were freed, and 10 held. Principal person detained was Thomas G. Gross, alias Joe Preller, 45, former convict and, police said, a notorious pickpocket. He has just completed a ten-year term at Leavenworth, officers stated, and is wanted for robbery here.

Bank Levies Are Upheld By U.S. Court

Tribunal Points Out That No Fraud Had Been Charged.

Creditors, Depositors of Federal - American Will Benefit.

Additional substantial dividends for creditors and depositors of the closed Federal-American National Bank & Trust Co., and the District National Bank, likewise closed, were in prospect yesterday following a ruling of the United States Court of Appeals that assessments levied by the Comptroller of the Currency against shareholders were validly promulgated.

The assessments, each of which was for 100 per cent of each stockholder's interest, were levied when it became apparent the banks could not fully meet their obligations after they had been closed during the March, 1933, banking holiday and had been operated by conservators for six months, after which they were placed in the hands of receivers.

A large group of stockholders in both banks sought to combine in a mass attack on the validity of the assessments on numerous grounds.

Assail Authority.

They contended there was no authority in law for the sale of the prime assets of the banks to the Hamilton National Bank and that the terms of the sale were unfair to the banks and to their stockholders. However, these points were disposed of by the Appellate Court with the observation that "Congress intended to give the conservator * * * precisely the power exercised in these cases."

The decision pointed out that there was no charge of fraud involved in the sale of the prime assets; that on the other hand the stockholders attacking the sale disclaimed any fraudulent intent upon the part of the conservator. Also, it was asserted, the court said that the charge that the sale was unfair because it did not take into consideration the possibility of future enhancement in the value of the securities sold to the Hamilton was "too fantastic to notice."

The conservators of the banks, John Poole, of the Federal-American, and Joshua Evans, of the District National, received "every dollar of the then reasonably obtainable value of principal and interest of the assets sold" the opinion stated. The assets of the Federal-American were sold for $4,420,422.19, while no figure was given for the price obtained for the sale of the "quick" assets of the District National.

Paid Dividends.

Since the sale of the assets and the formation of the Hamilton National, both closed banks have paid dividends because of increased valuation of their so-called secondary assets which were kept for slower liquidation. Creditors and depositors will receive substantial dividends in the future, it was said.

In both cases, it was shown, the sale of the prime assets were used to give depositors a quick 50 per cent payment on the total amount of their deposits. This relieved many persons of the hardship of having their accounts tied up for an indeterminate period.

Another aspect of the decision was that the Comptroller of the Currency may now take steps to enforce collection of assessments against other stockholders of the banks. These steps have not been pressed vigorously because of the possibility that an adverse court ruling might require the refunding of large sums. There was no possibility yesterday of telling how much money the receivers of the banks might collect on the basis of the rulings.

False Alarm

Clock in Dwelling Over Bank Causes a Stir.

The ringing of an alarm clock in an apartment over the Commerce & Savings Bank, Seventh and E streets northwest, caused a furor downtown last night.

An unidentified citizen passing the bank heard the clock clattering loudly. Thinking it was the burglar alarm, he called police.

Two scout cars, two police cruisers and a car from the First Precinct and several policemen in the vicinity descended on the bank from all directions.

Snake Connoisseur Pooh-Poohs Women's Fears, Birds' Hypnosis

Maj. Baldwin Holds Most Reptiles Harmless and Hauls Out 6-Foot Betsy, Caught by His Son, 13, to Prove Theory.

Snakes have charms.

But they can't hypnotize birds and they shouldn't scare women, Maj. William Ray Baldwin said yesterday.

Snakes are perfectly harmless creatures, Maj. Baldwin claimed yesterday as he sat in the lobby of the University Club, his home here.

And just to prove he wasn't afraid of the reptiles, he thrust an arm into an iron box and pulled out a 6-foot blacksnake, named Betsy. She was as docile as a lamb. She curled around the major's neck and circled his head.

"See," said Maj. Baldwin, who is an arms manufacturer by occupation and a snake-fancier by hobby, "she won't hurt you."

Son Caught Her.

The Major got the snake from his country estate in Maryland. His 13-year-old son caught Betsy.

"I've taught all my children not to be afraid of snakes," he said. "In fact, I try to teach everybody I know not to be afraid of them."

"It all started in Maine when I was engaged to my wife. We were out walking in the woods and a garter snake crossed my path. My wife screamed. I told her not to be afraid. I picked up the wriggling little snake and held it in my hands and explained to her that a snake was nothing to be afraid of.

"All Don't Bite."

"Ever since then I've been trying to educate my friends to the fact that all snakes don't bite.

"I've made a study of snakes. There are only three venomous varieties in North America. The rest are absolutely harmless."

Maj. Baldwin said he had taught all his family not to be afraid of snakes, that his wife no longer screamed at the sight of a serpent, and that his children found snake-hunting a very healthy pastime in the woods of his Elk Mills, Md., estate.

He said he hadn't tried educating his family to mice yet.

South Cathedral Mansions Will Not Be Rented, Official Says.

The Interior Department's division of Government space control, which allots office space for all Federal agencies, is not negotiating for rental of South Cathedral Mansions apartment house, Chief Clay J. Guthridge said yesterday following published reports to the contrary.

Officials of the Social Security Board, which is seeking additional quarters for its constantly expanding Washington staff, said the 132-apartment structure on Connecticut avenue had been made "available" by the agents but no serious negotiations were under way.

The board, if it desired to lease the building, would have to make the deal through the division of Government control. At present the New Deal organization's offices are scattered at 1712 G street northwest, and 1300 E street northwest and alterations are now being made to the National Theater Building to accommodate more clerks.

It was pointed out by Federal officials that many hurdles would have to be overcome before South Cathedral Mansions was added to the string of hotels, apartments and old mansions which have been drafted for New Deal use as a result of the housing shortage.

PUC Favors Changes for 6 Trolley Lines

Rerouting Is Effective July 11 in Attempt to Aid Traffic.

Rerouting of a half dozen of the major street car lines as an intermediate step to ultimate rerouting over the whole Capital Transit system was approved yesterday by the Public Utilities Commission. The changes become effective about July 11.

The changes are necessitated by the track alterations at Fourteenth and H streets and New York avenue and Fifteenth street and New York avenue, and to preserve a balance of traffic and keep maximum car densities on busy sections of track at a minimum.

The major reroutings are as follows:

Mount Pleasant line: Cars will run down Seventeenth street to Pennsylvania avenue, instead of turning on H street as at present, and will follow Pennsylvania avenue to Fifteenth street and then turn east on G street. They now run along F street.

Exchange Terminals.

Friendship Heights and Rosslyn lines will exchange eastern terminals and cars. Sixteen of the new streamlined cars will be placed on Friendship line and will run to Seventeenth street and Pennsylvania avenue southeast, while the Rosslyn cars will stop at the Seventh street loop on Pennsylvania avenue.

This interchange, it is said, will give the new cars a better opportunity to exhibit their speed.

The downtown terminals of the Fourteenth street and Brookland lines also will be switched. The leg of the Fourteenth street line now going to Potomac Park will be routed to the loop terminal and Fourteenth and Water streets, while the Brookland cars will go to Potomac Park.

Heights Line Routed West.

The Columbia line will be routed west of Fifteenth street and New York avenue, one leg going to Cabin John and the other turning at Washington Circle.

Under the new set-up the Capital Transit Co. proposes to operate the Brookland line, both lines on Eleventh street, the New Jersey avenue line, the Florida line, and the Rosslyn line, together with a portion of the Maryland line, with one-man cars.

Under the rerouting, it was said, the number of one-man cars permissible under the commission's orders will not be increased.

Brian Donlevy Climbs Toward Top of Ladder

Former Leyendecker Model Is Perfect Movie Type; Hollywood Jottings.

By the United Press.

Hollywood, June 29.—Tab Brian Donlevy, the conventional young man designed by Charles Leyendecker, as one of the very next roosters on Hollywood's top rung.

Donlevy, so typical a movie actor you'd swear he was acting the part, has been around only a year, but needs just one reasonable picture break to put him up among the Gables and MacMurrays.

Perhaps it isn't fair to give Leyendecker, illustrator of openfaced, blocky young men for cigaret and collar ads, all the credit for Donlevy. It is safe to say, however, that if Donlevy had not existed Leyendecker certainly would have invented him.

Collect all of the popular illusions about a male film player (the wholesome ones), and you have a perfect portrait of the man. Like this:

Born in Ireland a little more than 30 years ago. A pilot in the Lafayette esquadrille at 15. Spent a year at Annapolis. Emerged a powerfully-built chap about 6 feet tall, and broke into the movies after a string of stage plays.

Lives According to Blueprints.

Unmarried. Somehow he has acted himself into a rambling house with the best view in Beverly Hills, where he lives alone, attended by two spic and span Filipino servants. Told it was a movie actor's home, any fan magazine reader could find his way about it in the dark—swimming pool, lawn, tennis court—all the trimmings.

Drives about in an enormous roadster, of which the top is never up. There's an airdale in it, but you have a feeling there should be. Wears loose tweeds and no hat. Smokes a well-aged pipe, and is trailed by autograph hunters.

Oddly enough, the Donlevy conventionalism isn't a pose. It's natural. The only thing not true to form about him is his romantic attachment. The girl is Marjorie Lane, voice double for Eleanor Powell.

Donlevy broke in as "Knuckles," grim trigger-man for Edward G. Robinson in "Barbary Coast." A series of hard-boiled roles followed, and it must be remembered playing toughies is the surest way to the film top. Currently he's doing a "G" man disguised as a reporter in "Across the Aisle." This may be the one.

Doesn't Like Pooblicity.

Russian Princess Galina, standin for Claire Trevor, took this column to task for calling her Galina Krapotkina, saying: "That is noth my father's name. That this is my mother's name, which sometimes I use."

But when asked her father's real name, she cracked: "I tell nobody my father's name because I do not like pooblicity."

Anonymous Galina vowed she'll have nothing to do with acting, but hastily added: "Many have told me I do very well in pictures if I don't have my accent."

"And what am I doing about my accent? Why I'm taking lessons in diction!"

Freddie Bartholomew, Mickie Rooney and Jackie Cooper are on strike. When they showed up to go to work in "The Devil Is A Sissy," they were met by a tutor who insisted they study between takes. Regular school suspended a week ago, and the youngsters burned.

Cutting Room Scraps.

Helen Gahagan and Melvyn Douglas are off to Broadway to do a play as soon as Douglas finishes "Gorgeous Hussy."

A. J. Balaban of Chicago's Balaban & Katz Theater chain has joined RKO as a producer.

Pickford-Lasky has changed the title of Nino Martini's "Gay Desperado" to "The World Is Mine." It just doesn't make sense.

Fred MacMurray and Lillian LaMont honeymooning in Honolulu.

About the Showshops

THE Warner Brothers seem to have opened their copy book precisely at the maxim that says, "If at first you don't succeed, try, try again."

Not that "Hearts Divided," the new screen version of Rida Johnson Young's story of "Glorious Betsy," dealing with the romance between Betsy Patterson, of Baltimore, and Jerome Bonaparte, did not succeed during its recent engagement at the Earle, but there still were a goodly number of sticklers for historical accuracy who resented the picture's impertinence in never permitting the principals in its story to wed.

BELL.

So now all that is to be changed. The Warners, in fact, are so eager to make amends that "Hearts Divided" is to be rushed back to the screen at the Metropolitan for a repeat downtown engagement, beginning Friday, with an entirely new ending.

This, of course, will have the effect of deferring the F street engagement of Mary Boland and Charles Ruggles in "Early to Bed" at least a week—a long time to stay up—but the atonement to the Baltimore Bonapartes would seem to be worth it.

The new climax and denouement of "Hearts Divided," as it will reveal itself on the Metropolitan screen Friday, will disclose the successful culmination of the romance between Marion Davies' Betsy and Dick Powell's Jerome and will bring the picture to its final fadeout in a joyous, instead of a tragic and lugubrious, mood. This is said to be a great improvement from every reasonable point of view.

Since the film presented the "happy ending" throughout its Philadelphia engagement, one suspects that it was due to some sort of inadvertence on the part of the cutting room that Washington got a print falling something short of a complete realization of the story's obvious purpose. All this is remedied now.

Since the matter of booking what amount almost to local productions has come up, it may be of interest that a special added attraction on the Fourth of July holiday bill at the Earle, beginning Friday, will be an item called "The Song of a Nation," a Warner featurette in Technicolor, depicting the events surrounding the composition of "The Star-Spangled Banner." The film opens with a party in the old Key home in Georgetown, shifts to Baltimore harbor and then reverts to Georgetown for its climax. Donald Woods, former leading man with the National Theater Players, appears in the role of Francis Scott Key, and Claire Dodd as Mrs. Key. The Hall Johnson Choir, famous for its work in Marc Connelly's "The Green Pastures" on both stage and screen, provide the musical background of a short-reel subject that is said to be both thrilling and inspiring.

It was a star-studded audience that greeted Katharine Cornell's first performance of George Bernard Shaw's "Saint Joan" in the Biltmore Theater in Los Angeles on Thursday, June 25. In the audience were several players who have been associated with Miss Cornell, from time to time, on the stage, notably Brian Aherne, who was with her in both "The Barrets of Wimpole Street" and "Romeo and Juliet," and Basil Rathbone, who was the original Romeo to her Juliet in the Shakespeare tragedy. Franchot Tone, who made his stage debut with Miss Cornell in "The Age of Innocence," attended the Saturday night performance with Joan Crawford. In "Betty Lynton," Miss Crawford impersonated on the screen the same character played by Miss Cornell in "Dishonored Lady."

Among the celebrities in attendance on opening night were Marlene Dietrich, Norma Shearer, Tallulah Bankhead, Merle Oberon, Mary Pickford, Billie Burke, Gloria Swanson, Alice Joyce, Jean Muir, Clark Gable, John Barrymore, Harold Lloyd, Conrad Nagel, Clifton Webb, Nino Martini, Cecil B. De Mille, John Ford, Clarence Brown, Edmund Goulding, Herbert Bieberman, Rouben Mamoulian, Sidney Franklin, Irving Thalberg, Darryl Zanuck, Robert Sisk, Jesse L. Lasky, Robert Benchley, Dudley Nichols and Nunnally Johnson.

In writing of the occasion from Los Angeles, the perceptive Ray Henderson describes it as a "paradise for the infernal autograph hunters, despite the special police guard, which was called to keep in order the mob of sightseers in front of the theater."

Well, that's the way it goes. The cops probably copped a few good ones on their own account.

In case you are still interested in such things, it required eight pictures to fill up the five ratings in the Motion Picture Herald's key-city compilation of the motion picture "Box-Office Champions for May." "Under Two Flags," "Show Boat," "The Great Ziegfeld" and "Mr. Deeds Goes to Town,' in the order named, took undisputed possession of first, second, third and fourth places. Four releases were in a deadlock for fifth: "One Rainy Afternoon," "The Golden Arrow," "The Princess Comes Across" and "Small Town Girl." Washington has seen all of these pictures except "The Princess Comes Across," and that will be at the Earle Friday. In the opinion of this column, all of the eight are entitled to championship ratings, but not at all in the order established by the ticket wickets.

Many Washington organizations are assembling theater parties for the Thursday midnight preview of "San Francisco" at Loew's Fox Theater. One of the largest of these is expected to be the Georgia Democrats, who feel that they can round up every Georgian in town for this practically gala occasion. If the ticket demand is so great that the Fox cannot accommodate all who wish to see this extraordinary picture at its initial local showing, the overflow crowd will be housed in the Palace, where the same bill will be presented. Remember when Mae West reversed the order and forced an overflow audience from the Palace up to the Fox? Well, then.

Court Drops One Count Against Navy Suspect

Los Angeles, June 29 (AP).—Federal Judge William P. James dismissed charges today of impersonating a naval officer against Harry Thomas Thompson, central figure in the Navy spy case—an action requested by Assistant United States Attorney Howell Purdue, because more serious charges face the former Navy yeoman.

Thompson, who now is serving a jail term for the illegal wearing of a naval uniform, has been indicted by the Federal grand jury on charges of conspiring with Toshio Miyazaki, identified as lieutenant commander in the imperial Japanese navy, to furnish confidential information regarding the United States battle fleet to Japan.

Thompson will go on trial Thursday.

Roadsiders Go To Town in an Old Daly Play

The Roadside Theater's sagacious acting company last evening took further advantage of the fine spirit of sympathetic camaraderie built up with its enthusiastic audiences through three seasons of dramatic exhumations and made of the revered Augustin Daly, one of the most serious of the theatrical practitioners of his day, a humorous writer of the first rank.

In rehabilitating the ancient and creaky machinery of that penetrating social study known as "Under the Gaslight," the Roadsiders hit upon a likely vehicle for their proved penchant for achieving flamboyant comedy effects by enacting grotesque drama with deadly seriousness. The theater was a place of pompous speech three-quarters of a century ago and, as a consequence, the Roadside is this week. Virtue is splashed through the lines in purling streams of grandiose verbiage and villainy leaves its oily trail of slippery phrases through all of the nine scenes of the three acts.

The principals take free and full advantage of this quaint style by reading the lines and executing the stage business with an equal quaintness, a fine gusto and a remarkable esprit de corps.

Is Effectively Staged.

It seemed to me last evening, as handsome Ray Trafford was falling in love with whichever of the changelings seemed to be getting the break at the moment and the sinister Byke and his toothless wifely crone, Old Judas, were assiduously plotting to cash in sooner or later upon their inspirational craftiness in having substituted their own beggarly daughter for the child of a rich and noble house through the connivance of the wealthy baby's nurse, that the nine brief scenes were rather better staged than any I had previously viewed in the old Rockville pike hayloft. There was a more genuine illusion than in the makeshift devices of the Roadsider's earlier seasons.

It would be slightly on the side of exaggeration to pretend that I mistook the rushing locomotive that thundered past just as Laura Cortland had unstrapped Snorkey, the faithful Mercury of the impassioned love story, from the tracks where he had been left to die by the venomous Byke, for the streamlined Zephyr that recently made railroad history, but you got the idea. Miss Edith I. Allen's train was much the better of the two. Since fun is an essenial part of an evening at the Roadside, it was a bit of all right, that diamond-stacked limited.

Several admirable performances marked the initial performance of this old melodrama that is to be played for a fortnight.

Ann Garrett a Gifted Lead.

Ann Garrett, in the pivotal role of Laura, played with poise, dignity and a subtle sense of quiet humor that realized the complete measure of the character's worth without recourse at any time to burlesque or flagrant travesty. There is a conspicuous stamp of professionalism upon everything Miss Garrett does in the theater that should carry her far. Janet Coon shared honors with her last night as Pearl, "pretty, but no heart." After her second act rendition of that enduring story in song, "Experience," she didn't need any heart—she was "in."

Harold Stepler played the role of Byke with more than ordinary skill and contrived to triumph over a slight third-act mishap to his wiggery that would have disconcerted a less able or less seasoned actor. And was he hissed! This was an honor in which Mrs. Sears, as Judas, shared. Snorkey was impersonated with wholehearted naturalness by Jack Wells, and Joan Bates scored handsomely as Blossom.

For those who contributed generously to one of the Roadside's ample evenings of rustic entertainment it is only necessary to read the small-type paragraph preceding these hurried midnight remarks. All were good—as was also the entre'acte ice cream.

Rites Will BeToday For Poison Victim

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Cumberland, Md., June 29.—The body of Ewing George Mansfield, 32, who died at Allegany Hospital from the effects of poison which, the police say, was self-administered, will be taken tomorrow to Uniontown, Pa., for burial in Oak Grove Cemetery, following services to be conducted by the Rev. Louis H. Ewald, rector of Holy Cross Episcopal Church.

Mansfield is believed to have taken four tablets. City Detective William J. Cubbage said a bottle of poison, labeled to contain six tablets, was found in Mansfield's pocket.

Mansfield, who was formerly employed as a machinist's helper, had served in the Field Artillery, United States Army, and was honorably discharged at West Point in 1926. Besides his stepfather and his mother, Mr. and Mrs. R. E. Paul, he is survived by his wife, Annabel Mansfield, and three children, the oldest being 7.

Plays Lead in Old Melodrama

An individual prize winner in the District one-act play tournament season before last, Ann Garrett, whose latest photographic likeness appears above, went on to Broadway and an engagement with Walter Hampden, in what he then professed to believe to be his last New York run in the heroic Rostand comedy. She now is back in Washington for the summer and this week appears in the principal feminine role in the revival of "Under the Gaslight" at the Roadside Theater. Furthermore, she already is cast in the title role of Eugene O'Neill's "Anna Christie," to be produced by the New Theater Group in the late summer, under the direction of John Mann.

Hollywood, June 29.

Doris Dudley is balking about playing the role assigned to her in the Katharine Hepburn flicker, "Portrait of a Rebel." . . . Harry Bannister again tries to renew his fight with Ann Harding in the Nevada courts on Wednesday. He will try to have the decree giving Miss Harding complete custody of the child set aside . . . Fred Astaire has returned the contract to broadcast on the Packard program unsigned. He has decided not do radio work this season . . . Dorothy Lee's newest romance is Johnny Ariedge . . .

KATHERINE HEPBURN.

George Jessel has written a parody to that popular ditty, which he calls, "Is it True What They Say About Pictures?" But it is a lyric that can't be broadcast . . . A man who didn't receive even screen credit on the flicker, "San Francisco," but who rates billing with the stars, is James Basevi, who was in charge of all technical effects. . . . George Haight tells about the fellow who went to see the Schmeling-Louis fight pictures, and before he went in was offering 15 to 1 on Schmeling.

Katharine Cornell advertised that no one would be seated during the first scene of "Saint Joan." Many movie people believed this to be merely another line in an advertisement. They arrived late . . . Among those who were kept in the lobby, not allowed to enter the theater during the entire scene, were Irving Thalberg, Sam Riskin and Ben Schulberg. Three big producers who usually keep others waiting . . . It was one occasion when the theater showed its independence, when it was not under the dominance of the movies . . . Seymour Felix phoned Walter Donaldson and said: "I need some relaxation. Some exercise. How about playing a hole of golf?"

Greta Garbo walking about the Metro studio Friday and hardly any one recognizing her . . . Lenore Ulric is making a screen test in New York for the role of the other woman in Garbo's flicker, "Camille." . . . Sonja Henie is a frequent visitor on the set of the flicker, "Sing, Baby Sing," because she likes to look at Gregory Ratoff . . .

Eleanor Powell will sing for herself in her new picture, "Born to Dance." . . . Lew Brown, who is producing a picture at Radio, claims this cinema city puzzles him . . . People who need work come to his office for a job. Brown asks them to wait and they answer: "But we can't wait. We've got a date to play tennis." "How about tomorrow morning?" asks Brown . . . "Can't do it in the morning," they answer. "We've got a date to go horseback riding. Make it late in the afternoon." This is to notify Charlie MacArthur that he is in Hollywood.

Several of the newsreels have orders not follow a shot of Presidential candidate. Alf Landon, with a shot of President Roosevelt because it creates too much applause for Roosevelt . . . Jack Dunn, the iceskater who gets around, and Jane Hamilton, the R. K. O. cutie who gets around, have finally gotten around to each other . . . Ted Healey comes home and his wife says to him: "Honey, I'm so excited. I got 75 per cent in Latin . . . William Anthony McGuire's line about "Broadway's a great street when you're going up, when you're going down take Sixth avenue," has been rewritten for the movietown. It reads "Hollywood Boulevard is great when you're going up, when you're going down—Sunset."

Acacia Opening Of Home Office Set Tomorrow

Structure Just Completed Will Be Inspected by Capital Public.

The new home office building of the Acacia Mutual Life Insurance Co., located on Louisiana avenue facing the Capitol, will be thrown open to the public tomorrow for inspection, it was announced last night by William Montgomery, president of the company.

An invitation to attend the opening is extended to the Washington public by President Montgomery, who stated that 40 young men and women, drawn from the home office staff, will act as guides to take groups of visitors through the new building. Sidney and his orchestra will provide music during the afternoon and evening hours.

"It gives us a great deal of pleasure to invite the public to inspect our new home office building," President Montgomery said. "Not only does this structure represent the last word in modern business buildings, but we feel that it is a worthy addition to the list of beautiful buildings in the National Capital. It is therefore with genuine civic pride that Acacia opens this new building and invites Washingtonians to visit it."

The present building, it is pointed out, is the first unit of a construction project which ultimately is to fill the entire block. Additional units will be built as the growth of the company demands.

Plans now are being made for formal dedication of the building in August.

Blair Defeats Dublinsky On Points

Winner's Rallies Are Decisive as 1,600 Watch Battle.

Lew Raymond Awarded Technical K. O. in Semifinal Bout.

By Bill McCormick

Frankie Blair, the willing welterweight from New Jersey, who has beaten the best the District has to offer, added another victim to his list by taking a unanimous decision from Harry Dublinsky at Griffith Stadium last night.

An apathetic crowd of about 1,600 viewed the contest. The assemblage was apathetic not because the fight was dull—because it wasn't—but simply because they apparently did not care what happened to either of the out-of-town pugs.

Bull-like Rushes Decide.

The Chicago lad, who once pounded his way to a victory over Lightweight Champion Tony Canzoneri, strove mightily to stave off the bull-like rushes which carried Blair to the decision, but too often was unable to cope with the whirlwind attacks.

Just about the time Dublinsky had piled up a comfortable margin of points by deftly spearing Frankie's noggin as the New Jersey pinwheel bore in, Blair would sweep through his defense and knock away the lead with solid swings to the head and body which did Harry practically no good.

Blair weighed 144; Dublinsky, 143¾.

Lew Raymond scored a fifth round technical knockout over Jumbo Riviero of New Orleans in a semifinal scheduled for six rounds. Riviero's left eye was cut in the third round and his seconds accidentally spilled a cut-closing solution in the injured optic in the fourth. Referee Denny Hughes was forced to call a halt to the action in the fifth round as Riviero was blind in one eye.

Harry Jeffra, Baltimore, took a unanimous six-round decision from Santos Hugo, New Jersey featherweight, in a fast and furious preliminary. The loser was dangerous throughout, although he was decisively outpointed.

Jim Lamar, the Joe Louis and LeRoy Haynes of U street, scored a second round technical knockout over game battling Mimms, of Baltimore, in a preliminary scheduled for six. Mimms had been on the floor twice and was out on his feet and bleeding from the mouth when Referee Muggsy Morris called a halt.

Jackie Carter, Lancaster featherweight, and Doug Swetnam, local product, worked six rounds to a draw in an opener.

The No. 4 seeded star in the District tennis championships caught in action yesterday at the Columbia Country Club as he vanquished Ray Stocklinski, 7—5, 7—5, to gain the quarter-finals. Facing the most difficult opposition of any of the seeded men, Latona has become the standout of the tournament by winning four straight matches.

Welsh Defeats Yeomans at Columbia

By John R. Vosburgh.

Fresh from his latest conquests in Pittsburgh, where he won the Middle States championship Sunday, Barney Welsh, the Rockville Rambler, rambled out to Columbia Country Club yesterday and quickly began defense of his District singles and doubles titles.

Young Johnny Yeomans, of the University of North Carolina, was Barney's first victim, 6—0, 6—1. The victory landed Walsh in the fourth round. H. C. Thompson, middle-aged tournament official, defaulted his second round match to the champion.

Yeomans' brother of the more famous Eddie, former District champion, displayed anything but set-up tennis, and Barney got a real workout. Whenever he decided to hit out with full speed, however, it was generally a certain placement.

The real standout of the tournament to date, high-tempered Tony Latona, continued his sparkling tennis, to gain the quarter-finals. Tony, the playground instructor who seldom gets mad at anybody but himself, is still keeping his anger at a low temperature, and consequently defeated Ray Stocklinski, 7—5, 7—5.

Lieut. McCue in Victory.

Four of the eight quarter-finals berths have now been captured. In the day's outstanding match, Lieut. James R. McCue, seeded No. 4 among the out-of-towners, defeated Tom Markey, seeded No. 5 in the Washington entry list, 3—6, 6—2, 8—6.

Hugh Lynch, seeded No. 3, will meet Frank Shore today at 4 p. m. in the first quarter-final match of the tournament. Shore, seeded No. 8, advanced by the default of Sterling Williams, No. 1 seeded man in the visiting list. Lynch reached the round of 16 by the same means,

Only One Boat Unreported

Nine checked in either late last night or early today, and another withdrew, leaving only Dewless, a schooner owned by F. William Schmirning, of New York, unaccounted for. Dewless was not officially entered in the race, however, as officials of the Cruising Club of America ruled she did not have the proper equipment.

Owners Say Horse Is "Through," But It Keeps Winning

Boston, June 29 (AP).—Life is just one sleepless night after another for some of the owners at Suffolk Downs here, and an 8-year-old brown horse named Blue Day is the reason.

Blue Day is owned and trained by the veteran A. G. Tarn, of Winnipeg, and has won his last seven races, quite a feat for a horse of his age.

Early in the meeting Blue Day could have been claimed for $1,500, but it was common knowledge he had a string halt (and still has) which causes him to lift his knee way up when he walks. So possible claimants passed him up.

After he won his second race in New England and his price had jumped, other owners still couldn't see him. He had always been an in and outer, they insisted.

Now Blue Day's seven straight victories have put him in the $3,000 claiming class, but at his age and with his bad leg he's unlikely to go at that figure.

A top plater but not good enough for handicaps, Blue Day has the crowds at The Downs cheering him enthusiastically. They fancy the idea of the stout-hearted veteran trimming horses half his age.

Babe Didrikson Golfs Here Sunday

Babe Didrikson, touring feminine professional golfer, who can whack 'em almost as far as your topnotch pros, came to town last night to prepare for an exhibition match in which she will be featured Sunday at Congressional Country Club.

The tall, free-swinging Texas girl, hero of the 1932 Olympics, will be the guest of Roland Mackenzie, Congressional pro, and his wife. She will have a tune-up round this morning at Congressional.

33,000 Watch Reds Down Cubs, 4-3

Annex Seventh Straight in Night Game; 4 Runs in 7th Decide.

By the United Press.

Cincinnati, Ohio, June 29.—Cincinnati's high-flying Reds tonight won their seventh straight game, edging out the Chicago Clubs, 4 to 3, before more than 33,000 paying night-game customers.

The loss to the Cubs blasted their half-game National League leadership and allowed the idle St. Louis Cardinals to pull up into a tie for first place.

The Chicago defense cracked under the floodlights and the Reds' four hits, a walk and three Cub errors in the seventh gave Cincinnati all of its runs off Curt Davis, who had won his last five starts.

Paul Derringer, who distributed nine hits to the Cubs in winning his eleventh game of the year, drove in Cincinnati's last two tallies with a single. The victory enabled the Reds to climb up to within a half game of the fourth-place New York Giants.

Ross' Crown Canzoneri's Objective

By Jack Cuddy.

Copyright, 1936, by United Press.

New York, June 29.—Lightweight Champion Tony Canzoneri probably will give up his 135-pound title at tomorrow's meeting of the boxing commission and sign immediately for a crack at Barney Ross, the welter king, in Yankee Stadium in late July or early August.

Canzoneri's manager, Sammy Goldman, will go into a final joint huddle with representatives of Madison Square Garden and the Twentieth Century Club at 11 a. m. tomorrow. And if bull-shouldered little Tony is offered an even-Stephen cut on the net gate with Champion Ross, he will abdicate the throne.

It is believed the deal will go through, because Tony's abdication will pave the way for a double-featured $300,000 brawl at the stadium. Ross and Canzoneri would tangle in the 15-round main event, with the 147-pound crown at stake, and Lou Amebrs, the No. 1 lightweight challenger, and Pedro Montanez, of Puerto Rico, would battle it out for the vacated 135-pound crown in another 15-rounder.

It is understood that this twin championship program will be staged with the Garden and Twentieth Century Club acting as joint promoters—just as they are planning to do in the proposed Jim Braddock-Max Schmeling heavyweight title fight in September.

Jimmy Johnston, Garden promoter, and Mike Jacobs, of the Twentieth Century harmonize in the belief that the double-decked title card offering Ross, Canzoneri, Ambers and Montanez would draw at least $300,000.

Secret Meetings.

Promoter Jacobs and representatives of the Garden have been having secret conferences during the past week, trying to thresh out the difficult Braddock-Schmeling and Ross-Canzoneri affairs.

The Garden has Braddock tied up, and Canzoneri is more or less under obligation to the Garden, but Jacobs has Schmeling and Ross under contract. And Promoter Jacobs has a contract with the ball parks under which he is obligated to stage three shows during the summer at either Yankee Stadium or the Polo Grounds.

The Schmeling-Joe Louis encounter was the first of these shows. Jacobs can fulfill contract if the Ross-Canzoneri and Braddock-Schmeling battles are held at the stadium. That's why he is willing to negotiate with the rival corporation—and perhaps join them in promotion. It is understood that if they do join hands, "Uncle" Mike will be front man in the promotions.

Meanwhile Tony is under contract to defend his title against Ambers, the "Herkimer Hurricane," at the Garden bowl on July 30. The boxing commission named Ambers No. 1 challenger, after he had

Marshall Takes Ali Baba's Title

Columbus, Ohio, June 29 (AP).—Everett Marshall, husky young Columbus and Colorado grappler, won what was billed as a world heavyweight championship wrestling match tonight, defeating Ali Baba, the Glowering Turk, in 39 minutes 20 seconds.

Marshall had the Turk under control from start to finish and wound the affair up with a series of full nelsons, his favorite hold, and a high body slam and cross body pin.

Levin Tosses Savoldi In 8-Minute Match

Philedlphia, June 29 (U.P.). — Dave Levin, butcher-boy Adonis of Jamaica, N. Y., defended his claim to the world's heavyweight wrestling title tonight by pinning Jumping Joe Savoldi, Three Oaks, Mich., in 28 minutes of their one-fall to a finish bout.

TAVERNS FINALLY HALTED.

The Merrick Boys Club handed the Little Tavern Peewees their first defeat in 17 games yesterday, 9 to 7. Venetsky, Merrick pitcher, bested Ross, ace moundsman of the Little Taverns. Van Voorhees' triple with the bases full won the ball game.

Nats Off for Series With A's; Eye Second

With second place beckoning, the Nats entrain today for Philadelphia for a four-game series with some of their pet prey, the Athletics.

Even a modest winning streak would wipe out the two and one-half game deficit that separates the fifth place Nats from the second place Red Sox, and the four games in Philadelphia may provide the impetus. The Athletics have been virtual push-overs this season for the Nats who have met 'em in eight games and beaten 'em seven times.

Washington's most effective pitcher, Jimmy DeShong, will face the A's in the series opener today. DeShong has three victories over the Athletics to his credit this season, once holding them to two hits in scoring a 2-1 triumph.

Starts Back.

Despite the fact that he was on the mound in Chicago on Saturday, DeShong will be started back by Manager Bucky Harris. The right-hander worked only four innings in his last outing, when his bid for his tenth victory of the season escaped him.

Manager Harris received encouraging news today from Trainer Mike Martin, who reported that Catcher Cliff Bolton's injured thumb on his throwing hand was apparently not fractured. So great was the improvement in the injured digit that Martin has deemed X-ray pictures unnecessary.

Bolton, who was feared lost to the Nats for a month if his thumb were broken, now is expected to rejoin the line-up within a week.

Only a half-game out of third place, the Nats now envision rapid progress toward the top, with the team's improved pitching looming as a fight factor. The 2-1 victory turned in by Earl Whitehill over the White Sox presages the veteran left-hander's return to form and, if that is a fact, a deal of Harris' pitching worries will have been eradicated.

Manager Harris is elated, too, over the performance of Joe Cascarella, obtained from Boston in the Jack Russell deal. Cascarella was the hard-luck pitcher of the trip, losing two of his three starts, despite well-pitched games. He allowed only four hits in his loss to the White Sox on Saturday.

Potent factors in the transformation of the Nats, who won 8 of their 13 games in the West, were Joe Kuhel and Ben Chapman. Kuhel's consistent long-distance slugging built up leads for the Nats' pitchers and Chapman not only strengthened the outfield defenses, but was a terror to enemy pitchers when on the bases.

Miss Workman Wins In Middle States Play

Philadelphia, June 29 (AP).—Dorothy Workman, of Los Angeles, proved that she is the one to defeat for the crown when she put on a dazzling display of speed and precision today to eliminate Mrs. Helen Splaver, of Philadelphia, 6—1, 6—1, in the Middle States Women's Lawn Tennis Championship at the Philadelphia Cricket Club.

Alison Harrison, the host club's main bet for the championship honors, was extended to defeat Margaret Anderson, of Richmond, Va., 6—4, 4—6, 6—3.

Patricia Henry, of Los Angeles, National Girls' and National Intercollegiate titleholder, made her first appearance on the courts here since winning the 1935 girls' championship, a successful one by overcoming Polly Walker, of Richmond, 6—2, 6—1.

Marino Stops Spaniard.

Adrian Quist Ousted by U.S. Star

Perry's Familiarity With Atlantan's Game Defeats Grant.

By the Associated Press.

Wimbledon, England, June 29.—Don Budge, whose hair looks like a scorching sunset, again joined the tennis titans of the world today as he administered a crushing defeat to Adrian Quist, Australian titleholder, and landed in the semi-final round of the All-England championships for the second year in succession.

Like the three other winners of penultimate brackets—Fred Perry, the defending champion; H. W. (Bunny) Austin and Baron Gottfried von Cramm—Budge sailed through without the loss of a set, winning at 6—2, 6—4, 6—4, in an afternoon providing few thrills for the 30,000 spectators swarming the stands and the grounds.

Perry and Austin claimed Americans as their victims, Perry annihilating a willing but outclassed Bryan (Bitsy) Grant, of Atlanta, 6—4, 6—3, 6—1, and Austin making Wilmer Allison, the 31-year-old American champion, look as though he at last had reached the end of the trail. Austin won, 6—1, 6—4, 7—5.

Von Cramm, finalist against Perry last year, administered the same bitter medicine to the veteran Jack Crawford, of Australia, triumphing at 6—1, 7—5, 6—4 just before a virtual cloudburst ended hostilities for the day.

Experts look for another Perry-Von Cramm final. Last year Perry swamped Von Cramm in straight sets. If form holds true on Wednesday, the defending champion and the titled German are expected to emerge victorious.

Perry, who had seen plenty of Grant's style of play in America, knew what to expect and refused to be drawn into long romps with the Atlanta mite. Instead, he closed in as quickly as possible and on almost every point smashed Grant off the court.

The Briton broke away swiftly to a 3—0 lead and then Grant braced and pulled up level. He swarmed all over Perry for that

Haines, 42 Years Old, Still Pitching

By the Associated Press.

St. Louis, June 29.—At 42—nearly 43—Jesse Joseph Haines refuses to be "through" and the "grand old man of baseball" may yet have the honor of helping the St. Louis Cardinals to another pennant.

His teammates call him "pop" with an affection strangely out-of-character with the fighting, bickering, harum-scarum "gas house gang." The management, notorious for handling baseball players like chattels, has shown its lone bit of sentiment toward him.

Haines has been a member of the Cardinal pitching staff since 1920. He helped win pennants in 1926, 1928, 1930 and 1931. He won two games in the 1926 world's series and one in 1930.

But, since 1932, he has stopped taking his regular turn on the hill and his appearances have been fewer and fewer. This year, Manager Frankie Frisch decided old pop was just about "washed up."

Haines felt differently. It was late in May before he got into his first 1936 game. The Cardinals were losing badly and pop pitched a scoreless inning in relief. Ten days later, he was called on again to finish a game that was hopelessly out of hand.

That's the way matters stood until injuries began to take toll of the Red Birds' pitchers. Paul Dean's arm went bad, Leroy Parmelee hurt a finger, other members of the staff were overworked.

On June 20 Haines stepped in and held the Giants scoreless in two innings, but the game already was lost. The next day, Frisch had to summon Haines again and again Jesse toiled well, although still in a lost cause.

Frisch astounded everyone by calling on Haines last Monday for a third straight day. It was too much and Dizzy Dean had to come to the rescue, but Haines was credited with his first 1936 victory. It was also the 201st of his career.

And then, after only two days' rest, Haines entered the picture again in the second game of a doubleheader, after the Phils had taken a 3-to-0 lead in the first inning.

Haines, working carefully, putting the ball "just where I wanted it," throwing his "knuckler" in the tight spots, pitched a masterful game, holding the Phils to seven hits and one run in eighth innings. That run came in the ninth after Pop began coasting under a 13-to-3 lead.

Haines won't take his regular turn—his arm gets tired quickly and "why shouldn't it be tired after 42 years?" he asks—but he will turn in an occasional game like that one. They may prove the difference between winning and losing the pennant.

Apprentice Garrett Rides 3 Straight Charles Town Winners

By Walter Haight.
A Staff Correspondent.

Charles Town, W. Va., June 29.—Many things happened in this section of the mountain country today. Those related to the racing plant of the Charles Town Jockey Club, Inc., follow:

1. Apprentice Jockey Leo Garrett, from Nashville, Tenn., rode three straight winners.

2. Garrett had the mount on the two horses, Vanvola and Bobby Folsom, which teamed to produce a $339.80 daily double mutuel.

3. Vanvola, winner of the second race, set a new track record for the 5-furlong course. The 8-year-old mare was timed in 0:59 4-5.

4. The horse This Play, considered to have good chance in today's sixth race, was near death this afternoon from natural causes. After his owner believed the horse had been poisoned, W. E. Trussell, track veternarian, reported the horse "suffering from botulinus—due to bacteria found in cured grasses frequently in this section of the country."

5. The West Virginia Racing Commission sanctioned the extension of the meeting, adding six days and bringing the closing date to July 11. Two of the added days will be for the benefit of charities.

6. H. W. Wageley and the horse, Banana, were suspended for 90 days as the result of the positive saliva test on Banana after a race June 15.

7. It was announced that four days will be devoted to the Charles Town Horse Show Association. The abbreviated meeting will open July 29 and close August 1.

8. The Henry Tait Rodier Purse, named for the publisher of the Washington Bulletin, was won by Cora Kay.

9. Lady Windsor led all the way to triumph in the Purcellville Purse, while the "Muggins and Eddie" Purse, named for the track's publicity men, went to Keswick.

10. Jockey Lou Pikor rode one winner, while Sammy Palumbo was shut out for the day. The rivals are now tied for riding honors at this meeting with 37 each.

ADRIATIC held position when unable to go through at the far turn, saved much ground entering the stretch and closed full of run. NATURES DREAM went well after being squeezed back while running between the leaders on the backstretch. RED RIOT was held safe. MAZYNIATA dropped back after showing early speed.

FALMOUTH BELLE quit after setting the pace. TULEYRIES WAND raced wide all the way and can do better. JUSTA TEACHER dropped back steadily after getting away well.

with Bill Bennings.

Charles Town Race Track, June 29.

Dear Al:

You can buy Winchell. In fact, $100 will buy Winchell. The man who owns Winchell paid $50 for him. Despite a lot of patience, Winchell has shown nothing, but the present owner believes he is still worth a century note. At the moment, the horse Okay Winchell is devouring Don Yates' oats. Yates says he's going to send the horse to the glue factory if he can't get $100 for it. He won't take a cent less. "It's up to Walter Winchell to rescue his namesake," says Yates. The horse has won only one race in his career; that was in 1934. He has spent most of his career on the one-tank tracks. His record is even worse than that of the horse, Ben Bernie, which won several cheap races. Yates might cut the horse up and sell the pieces to Winchell's enemies. Perhaps Hitler would go in for a couple of big steaks.

BILL.

First race—Saxon Prince showed a fair race last out in top company and would have to show only slight improvement to take this purse. This one has worked well. Haymulus ran a neat second earlier in the meeting and is dangerous. Mains Wanderer could take it all.

Second race—Crossing Over finds a spot that seems to suit. Needs only an intelligent ride to defeat this kind. Miss Patches may awake to be a keen factor. Warned Off to take care of the others.

Third race—Miss Toucan would do a lot of running if turned loose in this field. Gets in with light weight. Dark Ayr seems to be returning to form and is the one to beat. Vennie H could surprise.

Fourth race—I'm going to give Twenty-three one more chance. This one works well and has blinding early speed. At the short route, a win would not surprise me. Nay Nay and Radial for the place and show awards.

Fifth race—Flosilda, with Pikor in the saddle, should take the measure of this group. Her last was impressive. McKell and Goantell will be ready if the top one makes mistakes.

Out Fishin' . . . . .

By Jack Hawley.

Hundreds of local anglers are specializing in light tackle fishing for the "killer," blue fish. During the past five balmy days of south and southwest winds a large number of these game fish have been taken from the waters of S. W. Middles. Chumming and trolling are the methods employed, the latter holding its own for the number caught. The writer returned Sunday evening with 14 weighing 94 pounds, an average of 6 pounds 7 ounces each, the largest fish tipping the scales at 9 pounds even; none were under 6 pounds. For trolling I used a white Japanese feather with two June bug spinners above the lure which was trolled at approximately three miles per hour; 450 to 600 feet behind the boat. This distance is very rare considering the distance usually employed (25 to 50 yards). At distances less than 150 yards one might as well have fished for them in the Tidal Basin.

The farther the line extended beyond the boat the more frequent the strikes and after 2 hours and 20 minutes of fishing with a 7 foot, 7-ounce Heddon rod, equipped with 400 yard Ashaway (Zane Grey) sport line, No. 9 which was spooled upon a 400-yard Ocean City Star drag reel, the skipper headed his craft toward Point Lookout, 18 miles away.

Blues to Be Fattened.

We can not recall the day when we landed blues of such large proportions, especially their length. By August first these fish will have fattened themselves upon the alewives and other bait fish sufficiently to bring the present 9-pounders up to 11 pounds, others in the same relative proportion increased weight.

The writer's last four trips to the Middles has been for the purpost of locating the place where bluefish had disappeared since the last catch on June 16. We never found them. Yesterday we discovered for the first time a large amount of "roe" in the fish and are now convinced that bluefish have been spawning on or near the Middles Grounds since the above date. (Note Bureau of Fisheries). Hence their refusing to take any fresh bait or artifical lures since June 16.

The writer also discovered that the fish did not have the same fighting qualities, viz: did not fully expose themselves when attempting to throw the hook, did not make the frequent long runs and short dashes which adds "zip" to the battle for the supremacy. The runs that were made, however, were very fast and ending with a tug of war which is not desired on a line that can be broken easily. We noticed several fish brought to gaff by the "pumping" method, by anglers using high test lines. The best time of day to troll for blues is from 7 to 11 a. m. and from 3:30 to sundown. Take along enough chum to fish from 11 a. m. to 3:30 p. m.

Blues Give Battle.

No other finster will quite satisfy the anglers' demand for battle, except perhaps the black bonito (cabio) or large rock fish, both of which are not found except through unusal aquatic conditions, and do not afford as prolonged a season as the blue fish. Croakers (hardheads), trout (weakfish), spot, etc., do have their place with light-tackle enthusiasts, especially the fly rod, but they are not to be classed with the three first mentioned species. They do, however, usually provide "sinker" fishermen with big catches, but are usually uninteresting because of their handicap; heavy sinkers.

All anglers during the first run in early May get a "kick" out of the first trip for croakers. Then they lay off for the blue fish to put in their appearance in the Chesapeake and its tributing tidal waters. A few anglers may differ with this department's opinion and claim that the rock, in season, is the peer of all our local species. However, large rock do not school in such profusion as blue fish, nor do they run in such close uniformity of weight. Bluefish, when traveling in schools, seldom vary more than one-half pound, the result of schooling together since fingerlings. At times it is comparatively easy for the angler to pick from the many schools of blues the size one wishes to fish for, by observing their size when breaking water a foot or more.

Louis Can Still Be Champion, Says Haynes

Philadelphia Negro Will Face Williams Here Tomorrow Night.

Leroy Haynes, the colored heavyweight sensation from Philadelphia, is not discouraged by the fate that befell Joe Louis at the hands of Max Schmeling recently.

"Schmeling just found the few flaws in Joe's fighting form," says Haynes, who fights Tom Williams at Griffith Stadium tomorrow night. "Louis will correct these flaws, then he'll be a great fighter. After all, he's only a kid, with only a few professional fights. He needed the seasoning he got in the Schmeling bout."

Haynes, who has been through the fistic mill and might reasonably be classed as a "seasoned fighter," also refuses to be discouraged by his own three defeats by Al Ettore. He feels that Ettore is somewhat of a nemesis to him—or has been. He points out that Jack Dempsey, John L. Sullivan and practically every worth-while fighter that ever warred in the ring has had at least one man whom he couldn't beat.

The Haynes-Williams bout will feature a card to be presented by the Allied Democratic Clubs of Washington. Souvenir passes for the fight have been sent to many dignitaries in the Democratic Party.

Banner Field of 65 to Vie in Public Links Trials Tomorrow

Four Places Are Open In Test

Rippy Is Big Favorite in 72-Hole Classic at East Potomac.

A banner field of 65 golfers, including the four members of the 1935 Harding Cup team, will face the barrier tomorrow in the first half of the 72-hole National Public Links qualifying trials and District Municipal Championship at East Potomac's course.

The list of starters was approved last night by District public links officials. Several of the entries were declared ineligible.

A stronger field never has toed the mark for this grueling golf test than the one which will tee off tomorrow and Thursday.

Heading the parade of stars is Claude Rippy, 23-year-old defending champion and captain of last year's Harding Cup team. Rippy, heavy favorite to retain his crown, has been paired at 9:35 and 1:35 with George Malloy and Ted Burrows, who played with him in the 1935 National Championship at Indianapolis.

Four Berths Open.

Four qualifying berths are open. The first four low scorers will be sent to Farmingdale, L. I., July 20-25, inclusive, to compete in the national classic at the new Bethpage State Park course.

Bobby Burton, bespectacled former District municipal titleholder, a qualifier last year, is paired with Andy (Chubby) Oliveri, District municipal junior champion, and Serge Folk, a sturdy competitor.

The committee has requested all players to appear promptly at the first tee when their names are called. Any player who is late will be disqualified unless reasons satisfactory to the officials in charge be given. U. S. G. A. rules will prevail.

Pairings and starting times follow:

Markey fought off match point three times at 6—5 on three sizzling placements and won the game but dropped his service in the next and MvCue pushed through the next for the match. The match was played at a rather slow tempo. Markey's cross-court forehand was causing him plenty of errors.

Grant Bows, Budge Wins at Wimbledon

stretch, but faded rapidly, falling an easy victim to Perry's steaming, low-bounding drives. The crowd, nevertheless, vigorously applauded Grant's courage in the face of the odds.

Budge played smoothly and never was forced to step up his game to the limit against Quist, who couldn't keep the ball in bounds more than two or three strokes at a time and had difficulty keeping his footing on the slippery turf.

The American was in front all the time except for a brief spell in the third set when he trailed 2—3. However, Budge took three games at love to regain command. Quist was all tuckered out from the continual running from corner to corner.

Austin achieved Allison's downfall by the swift and expedient method of drilling away at the American's weak backhand. Allison fought gamely in the third set and in his eagerness to keep the match alive fell flat on his face three times.

Canzoneri to Seek Welterweight Title

"strung along" with their lightweight elimination tournament from which Montanez withdrew. And the commission compelled Canzoneri to agree to defend the title against Ambers—or else have it taken from him.

Canzoneri and his manager, Goldman, do not believe a return match with Ambers will draw much because Tony beat the "Hurricane" so easily in their first meeting on May 10, 1935. Moreover, because of Tony's splendid showing in beating former Welterweight Champion Jimmy McLarnin last May 8, he would be a sure-fire attraction in a welter title bout with Ross.

This will be Tony's third bout with Ross. Tony lost the title to Barney early in the summer of 1933 on a questioned 10-round decision at Chicago. In September of the same year, Tony failed to regain the title in a close 15-round fight at New York.

Ross abdicated the lightweight title in 1934 to take a shot at McLarnin's welter crown, and Tony won back the vacated crown by beating Ambers in an elimination final in 1935. Since then he defended the title successfully against Al Roth last October 4.

Arch McDonald Will Announce Annual All-Star Baseball Game

ARCH McDONALD.

Arch McDonald, outstanding radio sports announcer of the Capital, yesterday was signally honored when he was appointed as one of the three Columbia Broadcasting System announcers who will handle the broadcast of the All-Star game at Boston July 7 over a Nation-wide network.

Making their choices from among scores of baseball announcers throughout the Nation, Columbia officials selected McDonald for the choice assignment in recognition of his wide-spread popularity.

McDonald's broadcasts of the games played on the road by the Washington Club have been a feature of the local baseball season for the past three years. Before coming to Washington from Chattanooga, McDonald was voted as the most popular baseball announcer in the Nation in a poll conducted by The Sporting News.

Preceding his nightly radio program in Washington, McDonald is on the air each afternoon that the Nats are playing road games. Sponsored by the Peoples Drug Stores, his game broadcasts are provided by the facilities of The Washington Post.

At Boston when the National and American Leaguers meet, McDonald will describe the pre-game features as well as sharing in the play-by-play description. Other Columbia System broadcasters who have been given the All-Star game assignment are Dolly Star, former National League umpire, now affiliated with a Philadelphia station, and France Laux, ace St. Louis broadcaster.

This Morning . . .
With Shirley Povich.

They said he'd a-been the greatest shortstop since Wagner if his presence wasn't required at third base through the 12 years he was a regular in the Washington line-up, but playing now at second base, Ossie Bluege is still proving a potent package with the Nats.

POVICH.

Stepping into a position that was foreign to him except for a few isolated games at the post in previous emergencies, the incomparable Bluege has been playing a mighty role in the upward surge of the Washington club. In his presence, the absence of Buddy Myer, the league's leading hitter of 1935, has almost been forgotten. Certainly Myer could have contributed nothing that Ossie Bluege was not equal to out there around the bag.

The transition from third base to second base, interrupted by a long siege on the bench because there were heavier hitters than Bluege available, has proved an easy matter for the veteran infielder. His work in the field bears not a trace of his newness to the position. A ground ball looks the same to him coming from any angle, and his ground-covering ability is not even disputed in the sunset days of his career.

The venerable fellow has been no drawback up there at the plate, either. He has been stinging that ball for a better average since they gave him the second base job than he ever compiled when he was a regular. That double-header in Chicago was typical of the way he had been hammering pitching throughout the West. In that first game, you remember, he doubled to drive in two runs and score the tying tally himself and then in the next inning he delivered a single that tied the game once again.

Base runners will tell you that they'd rather be tagged by Ossie Bluege than by any other infielder in the league. He has finesse out there. None of the clumsy handling of the ball that raises lumps on a base runner wherever he happens to be tagged. And the base runner can slide with utter abandon in the knowledge that the clever Bluege is able to protect himself from injury at all times.

The fellow's spirit is what prompted Owner Clark Griffith to say that Bluege would always have a job with the Washington club as long as he wanted to play ball. In recent years he has been buffeted from post to post with nary a protest, accepting the judgment of the Nats' managers and resigning his jobs to younger talent who had potentially better batting averages.

He was Cecil Travis' chief tutor when Travis was brought up from Chattanooga to take his job in 1934. Without a trace of selfishness or bitterness, he taught Travis all he knew about playing third base, then stepped back to the bench in unqualified resignation.

When Travis' services were deemed of more value in the outfield and young Buddy Lewis was brought along from Chattanooga to play third base, despite the presence of Bluege, the old campaigner took the rookie in charge at Orlando. Lewis' ability at the job bespeaks the manner in which Bluege was able to impart the intricacies of third base play.

Washington managers were able to develop young talent at third base because of the presence of Bluege. They could gamble with rookies in the knowledge that in the event of failure, there was Bluege to fall back upon. Why, a half-dozen managers in the league would like to have him out there at third base in the line-up every day.

In Short—

When the Nation's fans, unimpressed by Bluege's batting averages, failed to nominate him to the All-Star line-up in 1935, Manager Mickey Cochrane, of the American Leaguers, took recognition of his talents . . . using one of his prerogatives, he appointed Bluege to the team and then, after a slender lead had been rolled up against the National Leaguers, he inserted Ossie at shortstop to tighten the team's defense . . . despite the fact that Bluege was supposed to be a third baseman, not a shortstop . . . Washington is honored this season by the presence of Ben Chapman on the American League All-Star team . . . Chapman thus becomes one of the select coterie of players who have been named for all four All-Star affairs . . . in the 1935 game at Chicago he helped the American Leaguers win by beating out a bunt against Carl Hubbell . . . in 1934 at the Polo Grounds he went to bat twice against Dizzy Dean and poled the longest hit of the game . . . a 455-foot triple into the bull pen in left-centerfield . . . in 1935 he played only in the late stages of the game, making the final putout.

Little Receives Sullivan Cup For 1935

Brundage, A. A. U. Chief, Makes Award at Chicago Fete.

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, June 29.—Lawson Little, jr., of San Francisco, who, in 1934 and 1935 won both the Amateur Golf championship of the United States and Great Britain, today was presented with the 1935 James E. Sullivan Memorial Trophy awarded annually to America's outstanding athlete.

The presentation was made by Avery Brundage, of Chicago, president of the Amateur Athletic Union, at a luncheon tendered by the Junior Chamber of Commerce. William Bonthron, Princeton's great distance runner, received the honor last year.

Brundage, in presenting the trophy, said that Little, now a professional, by his performance as a competitor and by his influence as an amateur athlete did more than any other to advance the cause of sportsmanship in 1935.

Strong Character.

"He has strong character, meeting tests of gameness and fighting ability under most trying conditions," Brundage said. "His manner was unimpeachable before and during his astonishing climb to the top of the world in golf. He is modest, a gentleman and a credit to amateur athletics."

"Six years ago I had the pleasure of presenting the first Sullivan award to Bobby Jones, then the emperor of golf. It now gives me equal pleasure to present the trophy to Mr. Little for his fine performance and good sportsmanship for 1935."

Little, now 26 years old, modestly accepted the trophy to the applause of 700 listeners. He is engaged at present selling golf equipment for a Chicago manufacturer.

Brundage, as president of the American Olympic Committee, made a plea for aid in raising funds to send 400 American youths, both boys and girls, to the Olympic games in Berlin next month. The team sails from New York July 15 and $150,000 is needed to finance it.

Corn Driven 2⅛c Higher By Heat Wave

September and December Contracts Set New Peaks for Season.

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, June 29.—In a sudden outburst of strength, the corn market swept upward 2⅛ cents today, outdoing season previous top price records for September and December contracts.

Widespread abnormal heat and dearth of moisture were looked upon in many quarters as menacing the country's 1936 corn crop, and did much to stimulate active general buying of corn futures.

Business Gains Are Reflected By Advertising

Newspaper and Magazine Lineage in April a 5-Year Peak.

New York, June 29.—With its usual close correlation to general business trends, advertising during the first five months of 1933 continued to register substantial gains over a year ago. From an analysis of national and retail advertising budgets, which are generally based on a percentage of the sales figure, it is apparent that these increased expenditures are not stepped-up appropriations intended to stimulate trade artificially, but rather the natural result of rising sales, according to the Standard Statistics Co. today.

Newspaper space sales aided by a substantial increase in retail advertising during the past few months, have scored a material increase. Lineage for the first five months was 7.5 per cent greater than in 1935.

Both newspaper and magazine advertising lineage, at their seasonal peak in April, were the largest since 1931. Despite these gains, however, both were still about 31 per cent below their 1929 peaks, and on a dollar basis slightly further below record levels.

For the second half of the year the outlook for almost all types of advertising remains highly promising. Newspapers in recent weeks have received heavy retail and automobile promotions to attract the veteran's bonus money. These campaigns should continue through July and a part of August, bolstering lineage during these normally dull periods and materially aiding earnings.

Retail Advertising Makes Record Gain

Chicago, June 29.—Retail advertising lineage in the newspapers of 66 major cities broke all records for gains over the preceding year during the week ended June 20, Advertising Age reported today.

For that week, total retail advertising in the reporting cities was 22.9 per cent ahead of the corresponding week of 1935, the actual gain being 3,486,813 lines. Total retail volume for the week was 18,745,450 lines, compared with 15,258,637 lines last year.

Steel Output Jumps To 74% of Capacity

New York, June 29 (AP).—Operations in the steel industry for the current week advanced 3.8 points to 74 per cent of capacity, compared with 70.2 last week, the American Iron and Steel Institute estimated today.

Authorities at the institute explained that the principal cause of the rise was the fact that the figures were calculated on a five-day basis for the current week because of the coming Independence Day holiday, while a six-day basis prevailed last week. A month ago the operating rate was 68.2 per cent and a year ago 32.8 per cent.

The Market

By Carlton A. Shively
A Special Correspondent

Stocks Advance Moderately Against Profit-Taking; Chrysler Strong; Steels Weak.

New York, June 29.—Quiet confidence was shown by most financial markets. Bonds were steady and dull, and the majority of stocks worked leisurely higher by small fractions. A few groups were weak and others were mixed. Stock turnover was less than 800,000 shares, the smallest in two weeks. September wheat rose 1⅛ cents to 94⅞ cents a bushel.

Steel shares again were a drag on the rest of the market and offset the spurt in some of the motors. Bethlehem dropped nearly 2 points. United States Steel fell a point. Oils, utilities, chemicals and foods were mixed. Standard Oil fell below 60. Seaboard gained a fraction. Telephone recovered nearly 2 points, after the sales brought on by the drive for lower rates. American Power, Electric Power and Standard Gas were strong.

In the food section Kroger broke sharply into a new low ground on a report of declining sales. Corn Products was a little easier. Most of the mercantile stocks worked higher. Rubbers and metals were moderately firm. Tobaccos improved. Rails were irregular with small changes. Greyhound jumped nearly 3 points. AGWI common and preferred went into new high ground, with the tourist crop most promising.

Chrysler Performs.

Chrysler added 3 points to last week's gain of 8 points, but felt some profit-taking. General Motors had difficulty in holding an early advance of a point. Motor accessory shares were steady. Pressure developed on Preiffer Brewing and Midland Steel. Van Raalte and Lerner were bid into new high price zones.

Foreign exchanges were fairly calm with firmness in sterling. Francs came to a halt in their short covering recovery and broke a point, but recovered. Apparently there is a good deal of selling of foreign currencies by Frenchmen who, under a government rule expected to be approved by the French Chamber, will require all nationals to report, as of July 15, their holdings of foreign exchange and securities. The French government may have no present plans for seizure of such holdings, but most Frenchmen obviously would not wish to show posssion of too much expatriated capital.

Statistics of the new week bore up well under the pressure of the intangibles, such as the avowed purpose of the New Dealers to end competition in business and to set up a system of co-operatives. Those who remained unconvinced after hearing about the Tugwell book on the subject have only to read the latest magazine article by one of the best known members of the Roosevelt Cabinet, Secretary Wallace. Restatement, in a much milder form, of the "objectives" by the President clears up any doubts about the matter; but at least a showdown is coming and that will be better for business than another four years of uncertainty.

Trouble Threatened.

The half year ends with gains in retail trade which promise to continue into the summer. The Federal Reserve Bank, reporting for this district, found a rise of 9 per cent in retail trade in the first half of June and the bonus spending is just beginning. In heavy industry, activity is even more marked. The biggest jump in many weeks is estimated for the operating rate of the steel industry for this week. The rate is set by the American Iron & Steel Institute at 74 per cent of capacity. That is the highest rate for the industry since 1930. It is 2½ times greater than that of a year ago.

Some of the rush may be due to preparation against labor troubles later, but most of it seems to be in response to real demand. Meanwhile the public defiance made by the industry to organized labor, while approved in the financial district, created some concern. The market will not care to see develop either a serious strike in the steel industry nor an increase in wages designed merely to forestall unionization and strikes. So long as the important steel industry is under a cloud of threatened labor troubles, buoyancy in stocks will be less likely than would be the case if all were quiet on the labor front.

Bonus.

Anybody interested in following the day-to-day issues of adjusted compensation bonds and their encashment may do so easily from the Treasury daily statement. The issues of bonds apparently are treated as general expenditure on page 2 of the statement, the chief effect of such expenditure through June 24 being the addition of $1,655,000,000 of bonus bonds to the deficit, making that for the month $1,727,000,000, against only $732,000,000 a year ago. The issue of the bonus bond also is shown as a receipt on the public debt daily statement and, to the extent that they are redeemed, as an expenditure on the opposite side of the public debt analysis statement. As of June 24, $1,630,000,000 adjusted service bonds had been issued and $370,894,000 had been redeemed. Apparently the Treasury has not yet added to the public debt some $500,000,000 of payments due the Veterans' Bureau to take over a like sum of loans previously made by the bureau upon adjusted service certificates—the remains of the previously paid soldiers' bonus.

Seat Sale.

Possibly the signs of an awakening throughout the country which may mean the overthrow of the New Deal and the maintenance of the country on its accustomed economic course have stiffened backbones in the brokerage community. Last week the price of stock exchange memberships advanced $5,000, and a sale was reported today at a rise of $10,000, and all that in the face of an effort by the SEC to curtail the activities of floor brokers.

Chrysler.

Speculative embers in the stock market were kept glowing by the further advance in Chrysler. The stock moved up about 3 points to a new high price. Chrysler gives every earmark of that sort of sponsorship which formerly was called pool activity. Well informed brokers have been positive for some time that speculation in the issue was heavy in London—heavier than here at times. Wall street brokers hear a number of "points" to which the stock will advance. Those most frequently mentioned are 125, 135 and 150 depending somewhat on the conservatism of the speaker. Chrysler's business is said to be going great guns, but so is that of General Motors, which currently lacks the market drive of its smaller neighbor. Another tale going the rounds with regard to Chrysler is that the management plans on developing the company into a well integrated unit, something on the order of General Motors, with a finance division and accessory interests.

Bank Statements.

Banks are preparing to publish their semiannual statements of condition. Preliminary figures show deposits at high records, a further gain in Government securities held by most institutions and mixed changes in loans and other investments. Because a good portion of the bonus bonds will have been cashed before the statement date, the banks will show their usual condition of uncomfortably large cash holdings. So far as earnings are concerned, preliminary surveys show that dividends were covered in most instances with moderate margins and in some cases with unusually high ones.

2d Devaluation Seen With Rise Of Tax Burden

Nation's Income Must Gain 80% to Avert It, Survey Holds.

New York, June 29.—The country's tax burden, including levies to be made under the present social security act, is destined to double by 1950 and unless national income expands from the present $50,000,000,000 to at least $90,000,000,000, the United States is faced with the possibility of another devaluation within the next ten years.

This is the conclusion of Young & Ottley, Inc., investment managers, as analyzed in Merchants of Debt a comprehensive survey of the changing character of American banking and its effect on securities, published today in book form by that organization. W. von Tresckow, a member of their staff, is the author.

In its discussion of national income, taxation and devaluation, the study points out that at the present time total tax collections are more than $9,000,000,000, as against $1,600,000,000 around the beginning of the century. This means that out of a national income that has increased only about three times during this period, more than six times as much must be paid in taxes.

Necessity in 1932.

"In 1932 when taxation had reached more than 20 per cent of national income," it is asserted, "taxes and the debt burden grew so onerous that a devaluation of the currency proved politically expedient. Examinging the record of France, Germany and Great Britain, as related to taxation and national income, it is found that approximately the same thing has been true. A popular demand for devaluation has arisen—or at least devaluation has become expedient—when taxation exceeded 20 to 23 per cent of the national income.

"Analyzing the curve of taxation in the United States for the past 15 years, it appears that taxes may reach an annual total of $12,000,000,000 to $14,000,000,000 by 1950 without the social security taxes. Including social security taxes, according to the present law, tax collections may reach $17,00,000,000 to $19,000,000,000 per year by 1950. This would practically mean a doubling of the national tax burden in the space of 14 years.

"According to past experience, this huge burden can be borne without the threat of a strong popular demand for devaluation only if national income increases from the present approximate $50,000,000,000 annually to some $80,000,000,000 or $90,000,000,000 by 1950. However, to maintain a comfortable margin for a possible recession of income, due to recurring depressions, national income should increase at a rate that would reach $100,000,000,000 annually by 1950."

More Money in Use, Circulation Faster

Boston, Mass., June 29.—May bank debits, outside New York City, where the largest of any May since 1931, and passed a year ago by 8½ per cent. This marked gain in bank debits, together with the increased amount of currency now in use, means a speeding up in the circulation of money.

Curb Prices Yield To Late Selling

New York, June 29 (AP).—Sudden selling pressure near the close of the curb market today placed several leaders under fire, and the general list was fractionally irregular. Utilities gained slightly, and some of the issues made substantial progress. Commonwealth Edison was up 1¼ at 104¾, Electric Bond & Share, up ½ at 21⅛; Niagara Hudson Power, up ¼ at 11; and American Gas & Electric, up ⅝ at 38.

Oils were mixed. Gaines included Creole Petroleum at 27½, and Cities Service at 4¾. On the downside were Gulf Oil at 80¼, Imperial Oil at 20¾ and International Petroleum at 35⅞.

Several industrials and specialties forced sharply higher. Aluminum Co. rose 5 to 140 and American Hard Rubber 1¼ to 38¾. Losers, however, included Great Atlantic & Pacific, off 2¼ at 112, and Sherwin-Williams, down 1¼ at 136¾. The volume of trading was 185,000 shares compared with 201,000 shares Friday.

Am. Airlines Reduce Loss, Increase Traffic

Chicago, June 29.—Consolidated net loss of American Airlines, Inc., and subsidiary companies for 1935 amounted to $748,370 after $1,118,093 reserve for depreciation and obsolescence, it was announced today. This compares with a net loss of $2,313,678 after depreciatioin of $1,034,317 for this company and its predecessor for the year 1934. In a statement to stockholders C. R. Smith, president, said:

"During the year 1935, a total of 176,005 paid passengers were transported by the American Airlines, Inc., showing an increase of 103.8 per cent over 1934. Air mail transported showed an increase of 47.6 per cent over 1934. Air express revenue for the year 1935 showed an increase of 47.7 per cent over 1934. Operating costs per mile for the year were substantially lower than for 1934, in spite of the uptrend of costs in industry."

Two Railroads Seek Permission to Borrow

By the Associated Press.

The Wheeling Lake Erie Railway asked the Interstate Commerce Commission yesterday to authorize issuance of $1,400,000 in trust equipment certificates to finance purchase of 1,000 steel hopper railroad cars.

The Yosemite Valley Railroad Co. applied to the Interstate Commerce Commission for approval of $1,159,000 in first mortgage 4 per cent sinking fund bonds which would go to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for a loan.

Power Policy Checks Upturn, Bank Charges

Reversal Would Release Strong Stimulus, Says Guaranty Trust.

New York, June 29.—There are few directions in which public policy at present is working so clearly to the detriment of business recovery as in the electric power industry, says the Guaranty Trust Co. of New York in the current issue of the Guaranty Survey, its monthly review of business and financial conditions in the United States and abroad, published today.

"A reversal of this policy in several vital respects would release a constructive force of tremendous magnitude in the struggle to restore prosperity, the Survey continues.

"The situation confronting the industry as a result of Government competition and interference has once more been brought to public attention by the suit recently instituted by 19 operating utility companies in the Tennessee Valley area to enjoin the Tennessee Valley Authority from further operation.

"If a resumption of capital expenditures in the electric power industry should occur, it would, in turn, constitute an important factor in the revival of the durable good industries and in the demand for labor. The copper industry, the electrical equipment industry, and the various building material industries would experience a marked increase in the demand for their products; and employment in those industries, as well as in the building trades, would be stimulated."

Stock Seat $125,000, Advance of $10,000

New York, June 29 (AP).—Arrangements were made today to transfer a membership in the New York Stock Exchange for $125,000, an increase of $10,000 over the previous sale and the highest since April 27, when $130,000 was paid.

The top-purchase price of the year was paid February 19 when $174,000 was obtained for a seat and the lowest was $100,000 on May 4.

Associated Power Output.

New Yor, June 29.—For the week ended June 20, Associated Gas & Electric System reports net electric output of 76,520,136 units (kwh), which is an increase of 8.3 per cent above the comparable week of last year. For the four weeks to date, output increased 10.1 per cent above the corresponding period of last year.

Bluff Redouble.

Just as the honest redouble is a powerful weapon in the hands of a closely co-operating partnership, so the bluff redouble, designed to dissuade the opponents from bidding game, may be equally effective. Like all psychological bids, its success depends on two distinct factors: the caliber of one or both opponents and an adverse lay of cards that will make it difficult to "nail the lie."

Consider the effect on the opponents that a redouble such as the one shown in today's hand would be bound to have.

South, dealer.

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1 heart	Double	Redouble	1 spade
Pass	2 spades	Pass	Pass
Pass

The crucial and difficult decision on this hand had to be made by West after his partner's one spade response and South's pass. Without North's redouble he well might have decided that game depended on finding the diamond king and club ace (assuming they were not held by East) in the South hand. In that event East would need virtually nothing but the K J of spades to give him a play for a four spade contract. The diamond suit probably would take care of club losers in East's hand.

Thus, had North passed instead of redoubling, West probably would have bid three spades instead of two. And with such a strong raise, East certainly would have gone to four, holding, as he did, better than a forced response.

After the redouble, however, West would have been optimistic to depend on the two vital cards mentioned (the club ace and the diamond king) lying in the South hand, in finessable position. His two spade bid was as much of an urge as he dared give under the circumstances. But it was not enough for East with his bad distribution and sketchy honor holding and, despite the fact that he had reason to be suspicious of a redouble that was not followed up with subsequent action, his pass cannot be criticized.

Obviously there was no way for North and South to take more than three tricks against a spade contract.

Today's Question.

Question: My partner and I try to use asking bids, but we do not always agree on the proper suit in which to "ask." Kindly give the correct bidding on these hands, using the asking bid system. Both sides vulnerable. The opponents never made a bid.

♥A 8	♥7 3
♦K Q 9 6 4 2	♦A 10 8 5
♣K 4	♣A Q J 9 8 6

Answer: Corect bidding is as follows:

North	South
1 diamond	3 diamonds
3 no trump	4 clubs
4 hearts	5 no trump
7 diamonds	Pass

When South's asking bid of four clubs locates second round club control and the heart ace (by North's four heart response) he virtually can count 13 tricks. He knows North would not have bid three no trump with a singleton club, therefore "second round control" must be the king. The one danger is that North may lack either the king or queen of diamonds. The new five no trump bid is used to force North to bid seven if he holds both these vital cards.

Postoffice Business Booms at Zepp, Va.

Zepp, Va., June 29 (AP).—Business is booming in the postoffice of this Shenandoah County village since word spread among stamp collectors that the Zepp family which founded it was related to the German Zeppelin family, makers of dirigibles.

The postmistress, Miss Lookstamphor, has received large batches of letters from stamp collectors in many parts of the United States for cancellation and mailing to German cities on the new Zeppelin Hindenburg.

On the Air Today

John Heiney, The Post's radio editor, is taking a few days vacation. During his absence this department will be conducted by well-known Washington radio personalities. This morning's guest conductor is Grodon Hittenmark, of WRC.

Mr. J. H. H.—I wanted to drop you a line to tell you that your invitation to help out in the column while you are away, is truly appreciated by me, because I can't always tell all I would like to over the air, because I, well, I do have the "time," and try to give it correctly and when the folks need it, but, well, you know how it is.

Funny thing happened the other day. While going through my mail, and by the way, I like to read every letter that comes in, I like to read it personally, because I get a real kick out of it and then, too, it rather gives me more of a personal feeling with the folks that I hope are and have been listening.

But anyway, the other day a letter came in and I read the very brief message that it contained and when it said, "there is a little clipping I thought you should read," I got serious about it and had another cup of black coffee, for that always soothes my nerves while on the air and I don't get so jittery—but anyway, I found the clipping and read it. J. H. H., it gave me something to think about and I wanted you to think it over, too, and maybe some of the other morning announcers.

Quoted Proverbs.

It read (quote):—Proverbs 27, number fifteen: "He that blesseth his friend with a loud voice, rising early in the morning, it shall be counted a curse to him." (End quote.)

Well, after I read that, I had another cup of black coffee, for it sort of stops the head from throbbing and gets the mind back to that stage where you have to think. Can that mean that just because a fellow gets up early in the morning and comes down and plays a bunch of records, he's un-constitutional?

By the way, how are the fish getting along? Hope when you get the new ones you will let me know so that I can celebrate their birthdays.

I think I am going to have a big wish come true here in a few days and I want you to tell the folks if you can about it. Remember when I said once that I was going to have a big golf tournament this summer? Well things look pretty good right now, and if it all works out right I will be able to announce it later this week, but of course it depends a lot on the weather and humidity.

Where Are Song Writers?

J. H. H., where are all the song writers spending their vacations? Seems like they have been on one for a long time, or is it that they just don't write like they used to? Remember when there would be about ten tunes a week come out of the mill and eight of them would be good? Say, that was back in '22 when I first got mixed up in radio.

I said the other day, this town certainly is radio minded, and they certainly have treated me swell since I came from the West—and that gives me a kick, and Texas and the rest are no farther west than Chicago, much, and people never say that is West.

Could I ask you a question? Do you think that swing music has a chance? Or am I wrong in believing that that type is a fad and will be definitely out next fall? How would this be for a combination for a band (on a commercial) Whiteman, Waller, Crosby, Hanarhan, Teagarden, Louis, Ellington, Mole, Lyman; with you directing and me the press agent? Well, you never can tell. They are auditioning a lot of different combinations up there for this fall.

I must quit for I have to go see my best gal and get a cup of coffee and shoot a round of golf. Thanks, J. H. H. I'll let you know about the golf business—Gordon Hittenmark.

Maryland to Appeal Salesman Decision

Cumberland, Md., June 29.—The State of Maryland has ordered an appeal in the "bread case" involving indictments against ten salesmen for bakeries of Altoona and Johnstown, Pa., for selling their products in Allegany County, Md., without license. The defendants attacked the indictment and Judge David A. Robb, in the Circuit Court overruled the state's demurrer to the special pleas. Judge Robb ruled that the out-of-town baking firms could sell their products in the city, on the streets and from door to door without hindrance and do not require a peddler's license under the present law.

Ten driver-salesmen were indicted. Judge Robb supplemented his opinion with the comment that while under the law he holds the defendants not guilty, the Legislature should "provide protection for merchants and others who are engaged in the same business permanently in Maryland and who pay taxes on investments in this State and license fees for the operation of their business. From this standpoint it seems that it is unfair competition that should be corrected."
